Summary

At its fortieth session, the Commission for Social Development considered two topics under its agenda and multi-year programme of work, namely the priority theme, “Integration of social and economic policy”, and the review of relevant United Nations plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups.

With regard to the priority theme, the Commission adopted a resolution in which it took note of the report of the Secretary-General on the subject, invited the Economic and Social Council to examine the importance of integrating social and economic policy in promoting human resources development and enhancing the process of development and decided to adopt agreed conclusions on the integration of social and economic policy and to transmit them to the Council as a contribution to the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2002, as well as to the third session of the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit for Sustainable Development, to be held from 25 March to 5 April 2002.

The agreed conclusions contain analysis and recommendations for action to promote the integration of social and economic policy at the national and international levels, and, inter alia: call for broadening the scope of macroeconomic policy; stress the need for enhanced social impact analysis and assessments as tools to promote more participatory and people-centred policy-making processes; emphasize the productive nature of social investments; and encourage broad participation in the formulation of economic policies as well as the building of partnerships between Governments and all other relevant actors, including social partners, in the development process. They also provide guidelines for Governments in adopting holistic, integrated, comprehensive and consistent public policies and for the United Nations system and multilateral and bilateral donors in assisting and strengthening their cooperation with developing countries and countries with economies in transition in the development of social and economic policies.

In connection with its review of plans and programmes of action pertaining to the situation of social groups, the Commission recommended to the General Assembly, through the Economic and Social Council, the adoption of a draft resolution concerning the preparations for and observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family, in which the Assembly would, inter alia: reaffirm its invitation to all States to take prompt action to establish national mechanisms to prepare for, observe and follow up the tenth anniversary; call for a concerted promotional, information and media campaign at the national, regional and international levels; decide to devote one plenary meeting at its fifty-ninth session, in 2004, to the observance of the tenth anniversary; and invite the Secretary-General to continue to play an active role in facilitating international cooperation within the framework of the follow-up to the International Year of the Family.

The Commission also recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of two draft resolutions on disability. By a resolution entitled “Comprehensive and integral international convention to promote and protect the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities”, the Council would, inter alia: recommend that the Ad Hoc Committee established to consider proposals for a comprehensive and integral international convention to protect and promote the rights and dignity of persons with disabilities take into account the relationship of such a convention with the Standard Rules on the Equalization of Opportunities for Persons with Disabilities; and encourage Member States to provide adequate financial resources to ensure the necessary expertise and the participation of international disability organizations in the work of the Ad Hoc Committee. By a resolution entitled “Further promotion of equalization of opportunities by, for and with persons with disabilities and protection of their human rights”, the Council would, inter alia: welcome the work of the Special Rapporteur on Disability of the Commission for Social Development and take note of his third periodic report; decide to renew the mandate of the Special Rapporteur for a period through 2005; and request the Secretary-General to strengthen and improve mechanisms for consultation and coordination of relevant United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies and related organizations to further implement the Standard Rules, as well as to seek the views of Member States on the proposals of the report of the Special Rapporteur.

The Commission further recommended to the Economic and Social Council the adoption of a decision on the organization of work of the Commission for Social Development, by which elections of the new Chairman and other members of the Bureau of the Commission would be held immediately following the closure of the Commission’s regular session, rather than at the beginning.

A keynote presentation, a panel discussion with invited experts and a special segment with entities of the United Nations system were held on the priority theme “Integration of social and economic policy”. A dialogue with non-governmental organizations was also held.

Finally, the Commission recommended that the Economic and Social Council approve the provisional agenda and documentation for its forty-first session in 2003.

The Economic and Social Council,

Recommends to the General Assembly the adoption of the following draft resolution:

“The General Assembly,

“Recognizing that the follow-up to the International Year of the Family is an integral part of the agenda and of the multi-year programme of work of the Commission for Social Development until 2004,

“Noting that the family-related provisions of the outcomes of the United Nations summits and conferences of the 1990s and their follow-up processes continue to provide policy guidance on ways to strengthen family-centred components of policies and programmes as part of an integrated comprehensive approach to development,

“Recalling that relevant United Nations instruments on human rights as well as relevant global plans and programmes of action call for the widest possible protection and assistance to be accorded to the family, bearing in mind that in different cultural, political and social systems, various forms of the family exist,

“Emphasizing that equality between women and men and respect for the human rights of all family members is essential to family well-being and to society at large, and noting the importance of reconciliation of work and family life,

“Aware that families are affected by social and economic changes expressing themselves in trends that are observable worldwide and that the causes and consequences of those trends concerning families have to be identified and analysed,

“Recognizing the important role of non-governmental organizations, at both the local and national levels, working in the interest of families,

“Having considered the report of the Secretary-General on the preparations for the observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family, 1

“1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General and the recommendations contained therein;

“2. Reaffirms its invitation to all States to take prompt action to establish national mechanisms, as appropriate, to prepare for, observe and follow up the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family, in particular for the purpose of planning, stimulating and harmonizing the activities of the governmental and non-governmental agencies and organizations concerned with the preparation for and observance of the tenth anniversary, and to cooperate with the Secretary-General in achieving the objectives of the tenth anniversary;

“3. Calls upon all United Nations bodies, the specialized agencies, the regional commissions and the intergovernmental and non-governmental organizations concerned, in particular family-related organizations, to make every possible effort towards the implementation of the objectives of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family by integrating the family perspective into the planning and decision-making processes;

“4. Decides that the major activities for the observance of the tenth anniversary should be concentrated at the local, national and regional levels and that the United Nations system should assist Governments in these efforts;

“5. Takes note of the major study on the most important trends affecting families to be submitted to the General Assembly at the commencement of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family in December 2003;

“6. Calls for a concerted promotional, informational and media campaign on behalf of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family at the national, regional and international levels;

“7. Invites the Secretary-General to launch the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family in early December 2003;

“8. Decides to devote one plenary meeting at its fifty-ninth session, in 2004, to the observance of the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family, building upon the events to be held on 15 May 2004 on the occasion of the International Day of Families;

“9. Invites the Secretary-General to continue to play an active role in facilitating international cooperation within the framework of the follow-up to the International Year of the Family, to facilitate the exchange of experiences and information among Governments on effective policies and strategies, to facilitate technical assistance, with a focus on least developed and developing countries, and to encourage the organization of subregional and interregional meetings and relevant research;

“10. Requests the Secretary-General to report to the General Assembly at its fifty-eighth session through the Commission for Social Development and the Economic and Social Council on the preparation for the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Family at all levels.”

Noting the important efforts of Governments to implement the Standard Rules,

Noting also the important contributions made by various national and regional forums, expert group meetings and other activities in promoting the implementation of the Standard Rules,

11. Decides to renew the mandate for the Special Rapporteur through 2005 to further the promotion and monitoring of the Standard Rules in accordance with the provisions set down in section 4 of the Standard Rules, including the human rights dimensions of disability;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to seek the views of Member States on the proposals in the report of the Special Rapporteur, especially on the suggested supplement to the Standard Rules, and to submit a substantive report to the Commission at its forty-second session;

13. Recommends that the Ad Hoc Committee set up by the General Assembly by its resolution 56/168 consider proposals for a convention, taking into account the relationship with relevant human rights instruments and the Standard Rules, and, in so doing, carefully study the report and proposals made by the Special Rapporteur at the fortieth session of the Commission for Social Development and the study commissioned by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as the views of the Member States, international organizations and non-governmental organizations, in particular organizations of persons with disabilities, on these proposals;

4. The following resolution and decision adopted by the Commission for Social Development are brought to the attention of the Economic and Social Council:

Resolution 40/1
Integration of social and economic policy

The Commission for Social Development,

Recalling General Assembly resolution 55/46 of 29 November 2000, in which the Assembly invited, inter alia, the Commission for Social Development to take, on a priority basis, all steps necessary to ensure the effective implementation of all commitments and undertakings in the Copenhagen Declaration on Social Development and Programme of Action and in the outcome document of the twenty-fourth special session,

Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 2001/27, in which the Council invited the functional commissions to provide concise, action-oriented input to its annual high-level and/or coordination segments,

Having considered the priority theme for its fortieth session, “Integration of Social and Economic Policy”,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General on the integration of social and economic policy;

2. Invites the Economic and Social Council, at its high-level segment, to examine the importance of integrating social and economic policy in promoting human resources development and enhancing the process of development;

3. Decides to adopt the following agreed conclusions and to transmit them to the Economic and Social Council for its consideration and as a contribution to the high-level segment of its substantive session of 2002;

4. Also decides to transmit these agreed conclusions to the third session of the Preparatory Committee for the World Summit for Sustainable Development, which is to be held from 25 March to 5 April 2002.

Annex

Agreed conclusions on the integration of social and economic policy

1. The Commission reiterated the objectives and actions adopted at the World Summit for Social Development, held in Copenhagen in 1995, and during its follow-up at the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly held in Geneva from 26 June to 1 July 2000. It also recalled the Millennium Declaration and the development goals contained therein, adopted by the General Assembly in September 2000. These goals are derived to a large extent from the commitments undertaken at the Copenhagen Summit and the further actions and initiatives adopted at the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly.

2. To achieve these objectives and actions, it is important to recognize the interdependence between social and economic policies and promote their integration while ensuring sustainable development, promoting the eradication of poverty, economic growth, full employment and social integration and ensuring access for all to social services. It is also important to broaden the scope of sound macroeconomic policy to integrate social and economic policy.

3. The maintenance of peace and security within and among nations, democracy, the rule of law, the promotion and protection of all human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, good governance at the national and international levels, gender equality, full respect for fundamental principles and rights at work and the rights of migrant workers are some of the essential elements for the realization of social and people-centred sustainable development. Social development requires not only economic activity but also reduction in the inequality in the distribution of wealth and more equitable distribution of the benefits of economic growth within and among nations, including the realization of an open, equitable, secure, non-discriminatory, predictable, transparent and multilateral rule-based international trading system, maximizing opportunities and guaranteeing social justice and recognizing the interrelationship between social development and economic growth.

4. Investments in the social sector, including education, health, shelter, nutrition and social protection/social security, are productive. The establishment and enhancement by Governments of social security systems and access to basic social services for all should form an important component of policies for social development. Social safety nets should not preclude the creation of a comprehensive social protection/social security system.

5. Integration of social and economic policies requires better understanding of the causal linkages between macroeconomic policy and social impact as well as feeding of the results back into policy development at the national level. Social impact analysis and assessments are useful tools to promote a more participatory and people-centred process of policy-making as well as a way to provide a social perspective for policy conceptualization and analysis.

6. The Commission notes the recommendations made in the Secretary-General’s report on the integration of social and economic policy, inter alia, on the formulation and implementation of public policy, including macroeconomic policy, from inception to ex post evaluation. To achieve this, it is important to promote sound institutions, open and transparent public policy and consensus-building among all partners. The aim should be to encourage broad participation in the formulation of economic policies as well as the building of partnerships between Governments and all other relevant actors, including social partners, in the development process. While the objectives of social development are universal, there is no single model for achieving these objectives. The primary responsibility for the well-being of citizens rests with national Governments. An enabling international environment is important for the success of efforts at the national level.

7. Globalization and continuing rapid technological advances offer unprecedented opportunities for social and economic development. At the same time, they continue to present serious challenges within and among societies. Considerable obstacles to further integration and full participation in the global economy remain for developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as for some countries with economies in transition. Further efforts should be made to eliminate the obstacles facing the integration of developing countries in the global economy.

8. The Commission thus invites Governments to adopt holistic, integrated, comprehensive and consistent public policies to further development, eradicate poverty, fulfil the commitments undertaken at the Copenhagen Summit and the further actions and initiatives adopted at the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly and attain the Millennium Declaration development goals by:

(a) Integrating social and economic policies in order to eradicate poverty, promote full employment, enhance social integration, achieve equality between women and men, ensure access to basic social services for all, reduce inequality and mitigate adverse impacts of economic shocks;

(b) Promoting a gender-sensitive and participatory approach, through the involvement of communities, non-governmental organizations and social partners, as well as vulnerable or disadvantaged groups, in the formulation and implementation of development strategies;

(c) Creating and/or strengthening institutions for social and economic research, evaluation and policy-making;

(d) Promoting strategies that favour sustainable and stable economic growth benefiting all, poverty eradication, full employment and social integration as an integral part of social development;

(e) Improving and restructuring, as appropriate, national tax regimes and their administration in order to establish an equitable and efficient system that supports social development policies and programmes and, inter alia, takes measures to reduce tax evasion;

(f) Incorporating social impact analysis into the budget formulation process and improving efficiency and effectiveness in Government expenditures;

(g) Continuing to promote and enhance, as appropriate, effective measures, including fiscal and financial sector reforms, for better domestic resource mobilization and reallocating public resources for investment in social development;

(h) Developing or strengthening mechanisms to promote broad-based dialogue and coordination among all Government bodies responsible for socio-economic policy formulation;

(i) Pursuing pro-poor and gender sensitive policies, including microcredit and other financial instruments, asset-building, access to resources, information and knowledge, and the strengthening of the links between different sectors of the economy;

(j) Linking social sector expenditure to the achievement of the social development goals included in the outcome documents of the World Summit for Social Development, the twenty-fourth special session of the General Assembly as well as the Millennium Declaration;

(k) Developing policy tools necessary for applying an integrated and holistic approach to social and economic policy and incorporating social assessment into policy analysis to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of policies, the coordination of activities and programme implementation;

(l) Forging constructive partnerships with the private sector and non-governmental organizations to contribute to the financing and provision of social services in order to complement their efforts;

(m) Bearing in mind that corporations must abide by national legislation, encouraging corporate social responsibility so that it contributes to social development goals.

9. The Commission also invites the relevant funds and programmes, organizations and the specialized agencies of the United Nations system, including the international financial institutions, as well as multilateral and bilateral donors to continue assisting and strengthening their cooperation with the developing countries, in particular the least developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition in their social and economic development efforts by:

(a) Strengthening the capacity of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to address the obstacles that hinder their participation in an increasingly globalized economy;

(b) Providing technical and financial assistance, upon request, to strengthen national capacities in the integration of social and economic policy and to achieve social development objectives;

(c) Recognizing that a substantial increase in official development assistance and other resources will be required if developing countries are to achieve the internationally agreed development goals and objectives, including those contained in the Millennium Declaration; to build support for official development assistance, cooperating to further improve policies and development strategies, both nationally and internationally, to enhance aid effectiveness;

24. At its 11th meeting, on 21 February, on the proposal of the Chairman, the Commission decided to include in its report the Chairman’s summary of the high-level governmental and expert panel discussion on the priority theme “Integration of social and economic policy” (see chap. I, sect. D, decision 40/101).

25. The Chairman’s summary of the high-level governmental and expert panel discussion on integration of social and economic policy is set out below:

Introduction

1. It is now widely recognized that development objectives should encompass not only increases in national income per capita but also a broad range of social objectives, including creating productive employment; improvements in health standards and educational attainment; access to basic services as well as human rights. A much more holistic vision of development is now held by policy makers in developing countries and by their development partners. Based on this vision, there is a growing consensus that there is a need for further integration of social and economic policies.

The macroeconomic environment

2. A stable macroeconomic environment and sustained economic growth are necessary, but not sufficient, conditions for social development. It is commonly recognized that properly conceptualized and implemented macroeconomic policies are crucial to establishing these conditions. However, the opinions differ as to the degree of priority that should be placed on macroeconomic policy and stability. Some emphasize that, even in an integrated policy framework, macroeconomic policies aimed at controlling inflation and maintaining fiscal and external balances should not be compromised in the name of meeting public funding for social services or creating employment. However, the negative consequences of structural adjustment programmes have led many to question the narrow approach to macroeconomic stabilization and to stress the need to give social objectives equal, if not greater, weight in the formulation of macroeconomic policy. The choice taken often reflects prevailing values and conditions at the national level.

3. There is also a common understanding that the social impact of economic growth depends not only on the rate of that growth, but also its quality. Equity-enhancing growth spreads the benefits of growth more broadly among the population and is thus more favourable to social development. It has been pointed out that the Bretton Woods institutions have recently adopted strategies and operational frameworks that more fully integrate social objectives such as poverty reduction, social safety nets and participation with economic stabilization and structural adjustment.

Basic social services

4. The provision of basic social services, such as primary education, health care and rural water and sanitation, is an important social policy objective to combat poverty and increase overall well-being. It is also an important economic policy objective to support long-term economic growth. There is a basic consensus that, due to the public good aspect of these services, government has a critical role to play in their provision.

5. Higher social sector spending is an important part of improving the provision of social services and increasing its coverage. In the context of poverty eradication efforts, many developing countries are allocating more to education, health care and other activities that may be considered as poverty reducing, both as a percentage of gross domestic product (GDP) and as a share of total government spending. However, increased spending is only one dimension and is not sufficient for poverty eradication or the improvement of other social indicators. Targeting and efficiency of spending is also necessary. It was also indicated that some countries registered a decline in social expenditure.
6. In order to fund basic social services, Governments must put in place an effective tax administration and tax policies that broaden the tax base in a manner that least distorts resource allocation and does not, therefore, impede economic efficiency and growth. Donor aid and debt relief can contribute to the resources required for public services, but some argue that there are limits to the extent to which it is possible for countries to absorb foreign aid without adverse macroeconomic effects. If too large a share of public expenditure is funded from donor inflows, it is argued there is a risk that the real exchange rate will appreciate to levels that erode the competitiveness of producers of export goods, thereby adversely affecting economic growth.

7. In order to avoid inflationary or destabilizing fiscal deficits, it is essential to integrate the planning for social development goals into an economic and budgetary framework that will deliver economic growth and macroeconomic stability. Given the overall budgetary constraints facing Governments, particularly in developing countries, it is also necessary to give priority to the key social sectors in the allocation of budgetary resources. Prioritizing public expenditure and cutting back low priority areas calls for Governments to make hard choices. Failure to prioritize will simply mean that all sectors of the budget, including the key sectors for eradicating poverty, will be underfunded and will not be able to deliver the services required. Such failure will, in its turn, negatively affect macroeconomic stability and economic growth.

Governance, public expenditure and management

8. Higher public spending on poverty-reducing activities in the social sectors, such as education or health is necessary, but it must be accompanied by greater specificity and more effective priority-setting when deciding where the budgets are going to be allocated. There are cases where the poor reap a disproportionately small share of the benefits from education and health spending, some studies showing a weak link between government social spending and poverty reduction. The limited scope for reallocating a large portion of government spending to poverty-reducing activities in the short run also underscores the need for improvements in this area.

9. Increased emphasis should also be given to improvements in public expenditure management and transparency. To ensure that the increases in spending actually benefit the poor, it is important to ensure that public resources are used for their intended purposes. A number of countries are working on the strengthening of budget formulation by strengthening budget classification, with a view to better identifying and tracking poverty reduction activities and other social spending. Strengthening budget execution is also an important measure, most notably with respect to the operations of the treasury and improving expenditure procedures. In the area of budget reporting, programmes have emphasized more rigorous auditing.

Globalization and trade

10. While there is general agreement that globalization presents developing countries with both new opportunities and challenges, widely different views are held when it comes to the impact of globalization on social development. One view emphasizes the new sources of instability and vulnerability, including the volatility of financial flows, the pressures of international competition on wages and risks to the environment, brought on by capital flows and trade liberalization and the global competition for private investment. This view questions whether developing countries are benefiting from globalization and whether financial and trade liberalization is in their best interest. However, another view focuses more attention on the growth and wealth-enhancing opportunities offered by the general trend of freer trade and financial flows accompanying globalization and sees integration into the world economy as the best prospect for accelerating growth in developing countries, and thus favourable to poverty reduction.

11. Independent of these two views is the observation that existing trade barriers in the developed countries for agricultural goods and textiles, as well as developed country agricultural subsidies, are to the detriment of developing countries. This affects their efforts at poverty reduction. Therefore, the current international trade rules need to be reformed to be more responsive to the situation of developing countries.

Frameworks for the integration of social and economic policies

12. Some countries have achieved high levels of social development by adopting carefully crafted socio-economic policies. For example, Costa Rica has advanced significantly in raising its social development indicators and in reducing the percentage of its population living in poverty. While social investment spending played a large role, there were several other contributing factors that allowed Costa Rica to improve its investments and to ameliorate its social indicators even though its social investment per capita is lower than some other countries in the region. These contributing factors include:

(a) Leadership with a clear political vision and a sustained commitment on the part of the country and its citizens;

(b) Agreement among actors in the process of development to pursue a model of development that promotes equality, making education and health care public and universal for all citizens. There is an investment fund financed from universal payroll tax and relatively high business taxes. These revenues (about 2.5 per cent of the country’s GDP) are directed to finance social programmes;

(c) Economic stability, with the private sector as a strong partner in development;

(d) Effective conflict management and social stability: consultations and negotiations are conducted and decisions are taken in a manner to avoid conflict. A strong culture of democratic institutions and few conflicts in the successive changes of governments have permanently promoted dialogue and consensus-building and have also led to private sector investment confidence. In addition, since the 1940s, there has been no army in Costa Rica, as a result of which more resources are directed to social expenditure.

13. Another approach is demonstrated by Uganda. In Uganda, economic and social policies are integrated through the Comprehensive Development Framework, called the Poverty Eradication Action Plan (PEAP). PEAP, which was designed after extensive consultations with civil society, provides a coherent framework for designing, integrating and implementing the policies, including economic and social policies, needed to meet the nation’s development objectives. The Plan sets out the structural policies identified as crucial for acceleration of economic growth, such as reform of the utility sector and commercial justice system, and incorporates other sector-specific policies that have been drawn up by the stakeholders in each sector. PEAP outlines a strategy for the eradication of mass poverty by 2017, which entails sustainable economic growth and structural transformation of the economy to raise per capita incomes, combined with improved access to basic social services, such as primary education, health care, and water and sanitation. PEAP also emphasizes the modernization of agriculture, as this is the sector where the majority of poor people in Uganda earn their living.

14. Doubts were expressed by some participants as to whether emphasis on liberalization of economic policy environment and globalization, coupled with development of Western style redistributive policies (taxes to fund social spending) could effectively be applied to developing countries. An alternative approach was to emphasize investments that combine social and economic objectives into one, with a strong emphasis on the micro and community level. Examples of this are the extension of micro-credit, particularly to women; increasing the productivity of non-market activities, which are currently excluded from official economic statistics but nonetheless greatly impact quality of life, such as growing food for the family, gathering water and fuel wood, and care of children and the elderly; using cooperatives as an alternative to foreign investment; and promoting the practice of mutual aid within communities.
Conclusions
15. The debate highlighted the fact that social policy is an integral part of economic policy, with the reverse being also true, and revealed a rich menu of public actions to achieve socio-economic objectives and goals. The need to introduce social considerations into macroeconomic reforms was emphasized. While different opinions were expressed regarding distributional impacts of economic policy, the participants recognized linkages between investment in human capital and economic growth as well as importance of integrated approach for poverty eradication, employment promotion and social integration.
