The CHARATAN invited the Commission to remak discussion of article 31 of the draft coverant.

Mr. JEVE MOVIC (Yugoslavia) associated himself with the representatives who had spoken in favour of retaining article 31.

Air. AZIXUL

ir. ACMOUL (Lebanom) said that the USSR representative's interpretation of article 31 was wishful thinking. The article must be considered in relation to peragraphs 1 and f of article 1. Article 31 set forth a specific right -the equal right of men and woman to the enjoyment of all economic, social and cultural rights. Consequently, that right was necessarily subject to the limitations laid down in paragraph 1 of article 1. Paragraph 2 of that article . contained a formal and immediate undertaking on the part of States not to make any discrimination whatever at any stage in the implementation of the rights set forth in the coverant. He rerectally would have preferred to have seen the non-discrimination clause repeated in article 31. In its present form, the article simply recognized the right of equality and thereby weakened the formal obligation provided for in paragraph 2 of article 1 by seeming to make an exception for the realization of that particular right. The right could be ensured only progressively in accordance with the capacity of each individual It would therefore be better, even if it weart introducing a repetition, to accept the vertal amendment put forward by the Chilcon delegation at the 30let meeting proposing that the word "recognize" should be replaced by the words "undertake to guarantee".

Hrs. ROCHETELT (United States of America) proposed that the word "guarantee" in the Chilean varbal amendment should be replaced by the word "ensure". She reminded members, and particularly the representatives of Chile and Poland, that article 1 had not existed when the Commission had originally decided on the text of article 31. Consequently, it was not in the least inconsistent to wish to delete article 31 now, as being a repetition of article 1.

With report to the remarks made by the UNR representative at the 301st meeting, she caphasized that it was not enough for vexes to have second to elected public office in each country but they should also be able to held the highest public posts.

Mr. MYANEMED (Ukrainian Daviet Socialist Republic) said that the delegations which objected to article 31 were indirectly attacking the very principle of equal rights for men and weren. Furthermore, those who referred to part paint 2 of article 1 in order to justify the deletion of article 31 were the very same representatives who had voted against paragraph 2 and would still like to delete it from the covenant if possible. If they were to succeed in their efforts and if the Commission decided to delete orticle 31, the covenant would not contain any provisions at all on the right to equality.

Some deterations had asserted that article 51 was useless and that it would not have any effect on the existing inequality between the caxes. In all logic that deplorable situation should lead the Commission to take avasures to do every with such inequality and that was precisely the purpose of article 51. Accordingly, with the delegations of the USCH, Poland and Chile, he would wate in favour of the retention of article 51.

Only the United Himphia representative, who should be comparatelated on his frankness, had expressed his real reason for his objection to the article by stating that equal rights for son and wesen could not yet be granted in his country. The United States representative for her part had also shown that there was no true equality between the nexts in her country. He went on to cite various discriminatory provisions in the Impiriation; of certain American States.

The Commission should topo that factual situation into account as well as the currents need by the Cormission on the Status of Venon and should conclude that it was essential to include article in the coverant.

ir. William (Australia) remarked that numbers could not expect to reach the seme constantians if they started from different premises. The Ukrainian representative second to think that certain de's jutious wished to delute the non-discrimination chause from article). However, it was hardly logical to base a whole like of argument on the assumption that the non-discrimination chause would ultirately be deleted. The real quantities at issue was whether or not the Constantian wished to take into account the fact that equal rights for men and vector could be granted only progressively. The fivedish representative had taken the existence of the non-discrimination clause for granted when she had asked whether or not it applied to equal rights for men and wegen. An the basis of the same assumption, it would be quite illegical not to reply in the affirmative.

In the view of his delegation, the main difficulty was that the Commission had been noting on instructions from the General Assembly in inserting article 31 in the covenant. At the time, his delegation had doubted the window of the decision but the majority of the Commission had felt that it should follow the Assembly's instructions while reserving the possibility of re-examining it inter. Commencently, his delegation felt that it should adopt the same position it had adopted at Geneva. On grounds of logic the Evedish representative was right but the article should remain out of respect for the Assembly's instructions. If these instructions were to be reviewed that should be done by an organ of the General Assembly. His delegation would therefore abstain.

He emphraized that, in his country, the principle of equal pay for men and votes had been accepted but had not jet been fully applied. It was being applied progressively, parely derive by reaso of embiration tribunals. The people of Australia were been ing more and three socially conscious of the principle of equality and, furthermore, Australia had not forgotten that it was a signatory of the Counter which already embodied the principle of equal rights for men and women.

Firs. Minimal (Indie) supported the principle of equality. It was not the principle that was being contested but whether article 31 should be retained in the covenant. In view of the fact that article 1 leads with the principle of men-discrimination the question did not arise in the same form as in the previous year, when the Cormission had not yet decided whether there should be one or two covenants. The repetition of the non-discrimination clause might lead to confusion as article 1 povermed all the articles of the coverment on example, social and cultural rights. Furthermore, as it was imprebable that article 31 could belp to improve the present claration, the Indian delegation would abstain from voting on 12.

Mr. TRACO (Fragmer) surported the retention of article 31, and received the way in which him as attrib latitudes the equility of mer and wemen as regards civil and political rights and inchapped. The air of Grasumyen law was to grant when completely equality rights rether than to achieve strict equality.

Fefirring to the remarks of the Swedich representative, he said that he greatly admired Sweden's advanced state of social legislation and was therefore surprised that its delegation wished to delete article 31.

He feared that size delegations were using considerations of pure form to conceel their basic opposition to the principle of equality. For his part, he felt that the principle of non-discrimination should be repeated and would therefore yets in favour of retaining article 31.

Mr. KCCU (Greece) noted that enticle 31 expressly recognized equal rights of men and women, as distinctions on grounds of sex might exist even in a State with a homogeneous population in which none of the other distinctions listed in article 1, paragraph 2 were made. Article 31 therefore was not superfluous or repetitions. Furthermore, delotion of that enticle might have an unfortunate psychological effect by giving the impression that certain countries were opposed to the principle of equal rights for men and women.

Mr. MCMCZOV (Union of Povict Socialist Republics) thought that article 31 was wider in sector than article 1, since it covered all the secondic, social and cultural rights, and not only those contained in the coverent. The article was not, therefore, a nero republican of article 1.

In the United States, despite what that country's representative had affirmed, inequality between men and women was not confined to important posts alone. The United States Congress had refused ever since 1923 to adopt a bill to ensure equality between men and women, though it was similar to the provisions of article 31. From that he inferred that the United States representative's hostility to that article reflected the general heatility of the United States legislative bodies to the principle in question.

Es cited figures showing that in the USSE many important posts, particularly judicial case, were hold by women who also served as representatives of the people, held the highest descrations and had distinguished themselves in agronomy, science, literature and the arts. Contrary to the United Kingdom representative a statement, the recognition of the principle as set out in article 31 could have positive results; the fact /that the

that the number of women in the USER with a higher education had tripled since 1940 was a case in point. It was only in 1921 that Lenin had finally stated that the Lokebovik Revolution had abolished the basis for discrimination between men and women. The Soviet people was endeavouring to improve the position of women, comething the United Kingdom representative could not say of his people.

Fro. ROSSEL (Sweden) thought that the Commission would vote in favour of raintaining crticle 31; the discussion had, however, asswed a purpose by bringing out each delegation's position on the problem of equality between men and woman. The fact that it had adopted the principle of non-discrimination in article I showed that the Commission considered such mention in the covenant to be useful.

In reply to the USE representative's reference to a Swedish law of 1866, she noted that her country had undergone many changes cines that time, though fortunately, it had preserved its denocratic system. She wished to make clear, for the benefit of the Uruguayan representative, that she was stating the views of her Government, and for that of the USER representative, that she was not affaid to assure responsibility for the proposal to delete article 31 (E/CH.L/L.77/Rev.1) which weakened the provisions of article 1 while adding nothing to the coverant.

Mr. MOARE (United Kingdom) explained that, contrary to what the Unreinian representative and accorded, he had never proposed the deletion of article 1, paragraph 2, and his criticism of that prograph arcse solely out of the fact that it placed States under an obligation to act at once. As the Lebanese representative had stressed, article 31 was subject to the clause of progressive realization in article 1, paragraph 1. Fis objection, therefore, did not relate to the substances of article 31, but merely to the fact that the article was unnecessarily repetitions. He would vote against the Chilean amendment because it reproduced in article 31 the formula he objected to in article 1, paragraph 2. There was no med to answer the remarks of the USSR representative; he could enerly mention a number of fields in which women had distinguished themselves in the United Kingdom.

Mr. FRACCO (Grugmay), in reply to the Swedish representative, said that he had never Counted the fact that the was following her Government's instructions. That was why he was unable to understand her attitude to article 31.

The CSARWAN said that before voting on article 31, the Commission must vote on a verbal Chilean amendment to replace the word "recognize" by "undertake to guarantee", to which the United States representative had submitted a verbal sub-amendment to replace the word "guarantee" by "ensure", and also on a verbal emendment by Greece, to replace "recognize" by "reaffirm". Although those amendments had been submitted after the set time limit, he suggested that the Commission should consider them receivable in accordance with its previous decisions.

it was as docided.

The CAIRVAN property that a vote should be taken in the following order:

(1) the United States sub-associated to the Chilean amondment; (2) the Chilean amendment; (3) the Greek associated in case the Chilean amendment was rejected;

(4) article 31 which, on the Prited France representative's request, would be voted on in two parts; and (5) the text as a whole with any amendments that might be adopted.

It was so decided.

The CHARMAN put to the vote the United States verbal assesdment to replace, in the Chilean verbal assesdment, the word "Gharantwe" by the word "encure".

The United States anyoducat to the Callern consident was adopted by 8 votes to 3, with f about one.

The CHAINAN put to the vote the Chilern ascadeent as acdified by the United States amountary, to replace the word "recognize" by the words "undertake to ensure".

The Chilean amendment as amended was adopted by 16 votes to 3, with sebstentions.

The CEAIRWAN amounced that, in compliance with the United States representative's request, he would put to the vote the second part of article 31; partly, the vants "and particularly of those set forth in the precent covenant".

Mr. !KROLO7 (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) asked that a vote should be taken first on the opening words of article 31, as far as the word 'rights', and then on the second part, beginning with the words 'and particularly'. I wither, he would like a vote by roll-call to be taken on the two parts of the text.

The CTAIRDAN said that, in accordance with the respective requests of the United States and USCR representatives, article 31 would be put to the vote in parts as follows: (1) the first part to the word "rights"; (2) the words "and particularly of those"; (3) the words "set forth in this covenant".

A vote wes taken by rell-call on the first part of article 31.

Abatairing: Australia, Balgium, China, France, India.

Article 31 as a whole as regarded was adonted by 10 votes to 3. with 5 abstentions.

A7MI Bey (Egypt) explained that although the Swedish proposal (E/CN.h/L.77/Rev.1) was logical, he had been afraid that, the vote being only provisional, the idea of equality between the sexes night disappear from the covenant if article 1, paragraph 2 were revised and its scope reduced. He had therefore voted for article 31, which would refeguerd that principle until the final revision of article 1, paragraph 2.

Mr. NISOT (Delgium) had abstained because in the light of article 1 he thought article 31 superfluous; for the came reason he had taken no part in the debate on the latter article.

Mr. MOROIGY (Union of S viet Socialist Republics) had voted to retain article 31 despite the fact that it had been weakened by the deletion of certain important words.

On the other hand, the substitution of the words "undertake to ensure" for the word "recognize" was an improvement. Es received the right at some later time to propose a revision to the text adopted.

The CHAIR'AN announced that the debate on article 31 was closed and that the Cramission would take up the examination of a new article proposed by the French representative (E/CH.4/L.66/Rev.1).

Mr. JUVIGET (France) observed that a draft article on the right to own property (P/CM.4/L.46) had been submitted at the Commission's seventh section, subject to later alteration.

The right mentioned in the draft article was dealt with in article 17 of the Universal Declaration of Ruman Rights. The notion of property embedded in the draft article was not absolute; it was not considered as a sacred right, and there was full recognition of the fact that individual comerchip of property must be conditioned by the needs of society. In all countries the effective extent of collective comerchip was increasing, according to differing conceptions of public utility. The need for compensation in the event of expropriation was recognized in the text, but there was no insistence on a preliminary compensation as the text was intended to be of international application and the details of implementation were mattern for the decertic legislation of each country.

Mrs. ROCGNAIT (Unite' States of America) said that her delegation was in favour of the insertion of the article on the right to sam property in the covenant. The first paragraph of the French proposal (E/CH.4/L.66) repreduced the text of article 17 of the Declaration of Ruman Rights, and the United States delegation would note for it. Her delegation saw no objection to the second paragraph of the proposal, although it seemed to have no purpose, and the third paragraph appeared to enter into superfluous details.

ATMI Bey (hept) supported the French proposal (3/CM.4/L.66) as a whole. He pointed out that the first prograph set out the principle, the necond indicated clearly that that principle was to be subject to desestic legislation, and the third referred to a fundamental problem which had caused many disputes. In that connexion, the proposed text avoided atmse by stressing the need for legislation on exprepriation, for the application of which the courts would be responsible.

Fir. KIROU (Greece) amnounced that, like the representative of Egypt, he would vote in favour of the French proposal (E/CM.4/L.66) as a whole.

Nr. AZIDIL (Lobanom) approved the proposal under discussion (E/CN.4/L.66), but wanted to ask the French representative whether or not it was to be subject to the limitations of article 1. If so, he would propose that the words "recognize the right of every person to own property" in the first paragraph should be replaced by the words "undertake to respect the right of every person to own property". In the second paragraph, he proposed that the words "The exercise of" should be added before the words "this right". The Lebanese delegation would vote in favour of the French proposal if it were thus encoded.

Mr. NISOT (Belgium) said he would not vote either in support of the second paragraph of the 1r ach proposal (E/CM.4/L.66) as he thought that its terms were too absolute and handly compatible with the rules of private international law nor would be support the third paragraph; though it stipulated that compensation for expropriation on grounds of public ability should be equitable, it failed to make it clear that the compensation should be preliminary.

Mr. JEVNEHOVIC (Yugoslavia) wished to make a reservation with regard to the French proposal (E/CN.4/L.66), which embedded the principle of the right to can property. The term "property" had a very general sense and might include ill-gotten gains and it was inadmissible that the right to can property should be protected unconditionally. Hr. PRIFE (United Kingdom) and that he had not had time theroughly to study the French proposal. The principle it laid down seemed walld, but he was not sure that it had been correctly drafted. The first paragraph provided that the State should recognize the right of every person to our property and it might be asked whether that also meant that a State would have to undertake that every person should become a property sumer. Certain difficulties of interpretation right arise as regards the second paragraph. Lastly, it was very difficult to lay down clearly in one sentence principles relating to such a delicate question as expropriation. That term referred to cases where prints authorities degrived an individual of his property or of a part of his property. He was not however certain types of expropriation for which no compensation was given, as in the case of confinentions sade following criminal conviction. Be could not regard the terms of the third paragraph as savinfactory.

The CRAIRWAN real cut the list of speakers and declared it alcoses.

lir. KROU (Creece) explained to the United Kingdom representative that the first prograph referred to the right to own property and not to the goods pensuanci by individuals. It morely laid down that the State should guarantee to every person the right to own property.

Mr. VARLED (Pakistan) thought that the coverant should recognize the right to our property and was therefore ready to support the French proposal.

Hrs. MERTA (India) said she would vote for the first two paragraphs but thought the third was unscessary.

Mr. MCRCZCV (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics) said that his delegation had no objection to most of the provisions in the French proposal. He asked, however, for a coparate vote on the words "and subject to fair compensation" in the third paragraph, as he intended to vote against them.

The question of the amount of compensation to be paid in the case of expropriation case exclusively within the demestic jurisdiction of States.

The third partgraph class provided that expropriation might take place only in circumstance: defined by law. Arbitrary expropriation was therefore ruled cut and there was no need for a special provision on the question of compensation. Puritarence, that planning was value because the idea of "fair compensation" erold be interpreted to writers ways according to the easen considered. There was also the danger tint it night be used by Colonial Powers or countries which economically dominated under-developed countries as a legal protext to retain the The Commission and adopted an article privileges which they beld illogally. providing that the right of peoples to self-determination included the right to permanent severelizaty ever their natural wealth and resources and that any right held by other States could in no way justify a people being deprived of its own means of substatence. The value of that article should not be impaired by including in the coverant a provision which might give rise to tendentious interpretations and emale certain Powers to continue to emploit under-duveloped countries. Such a provision might complicate international relations and might give rise to situations which were a threat to peace and international accurity. He then referred to the controversy over the exprepriation of the property of the Angle-In mion Cil Company, and quoted the obstonents of the Prime Minister or Iran. He also referred to the case of Polivia which was exploited by United States ponopoline.

Fir. HOME (United Hingdom) was corry that the UNIX representative bad seen fit to introduce into the debate considerations which were of purely propropriate value. He organized to the first that the UNIX representative had quoted the more statements of one of the parties to the Angle-Iranian dispute to the Commission as irrefutable proofs.

As regards the second paragraph of the French proposal (E/CE.4/L.66), he thought it night be dangerous to give States an opportunity to adopt have which might restrict the right to can property. In view of the reservations he had under previously on the other two paragraphs, it was difficult for him to support the proposal.

Fire. ROCKEVELY (United States of .merica) wished to know whether the second pragraph referred solely to rights to real property. She did not think that the paregraph could validly apply to rights to movedle property and in view of the doubt which right erice in that connexion would support the first and third paregraph only.

Mr. LORATHERI (Poland) recalled that the question of fair compensation had been related at the time of the adoption of paragraph 3 of the article on the night of peoples to solf-determination (E/CH.b/C63). History clearly showed that under cover of the need for such compensation people might be deprived of their needs of subsistance. He hoped, therefore, that the Commission would bear that fact in mind then a vote the taken on the words "subject to fair compensation".

French proposal as anothed by the Lebunose anothers. The second paragraph should cover immorables only but it might be asked whether it did not apply also to novables. As regards the third paragraph, it was a question of the receipt of the parago "public utility". In Australia that question was covered by a constitutional provision, and the australian Sectionary agree that it should eems under the jurisdiction of an international court. It ingut also be asked what effect a provision of that type would have on the principles of international law relating to alien property at present in force.

Mr. MRCZOV (Enton of Soviet Socialist Population) vished to study the Russian text of the Lobaness amendment before voting on the French proposal (E/CH.4/L.66) and therefore moved the adjournment of the meeting.

The protocol was adopted by 7 votes to 3, with A abstentions.

The CHAIRMS could that hefere declaring the mosting closed he wished to make some remarks on procedural questions, and asked whether the French representative accepted the Lepanese anendment.

Mr. JUVICAY (France) replied in the affirmative.

The CHARMAN suggested that when it had completed the discussion of the any criticis proposed by France (E/CM.4/L.56) the Commission chould study recoveredations I and II in annex 2 of the report of the fourth session of the Sub-Semiconom on Prevention of Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities (E/C.1.4/L-1) and should then me on to consider the new article suggested by France (F/CM.4/L.67) and article 32 in that order. It might then examine the protection of the coverant on encannic, social and cultural rights, and the United States proposel (E/CM.4/L.164). Lestly, it would deal with articles 1 to 16 of the draft coverant.

He suggested that the time limit for the subside ion of proposals and amendments for a procedule to the coverant on economic, social and cultural rights should be 5.30 p =. on 21 May 1950.

It was so decided.

Fr. MCRCZOV (thich of Joviet Socialist Appublies) wished to know whether all the amendments one proposals regarding articles 1 to 15 of the coverant appearing in cases III of the resort of the Commission's seventh session were before the Commission.

The CRAIRMAN said that the Secretariat would distribute a document giving all necessary information on that point at an appropriate time.

The punting roce at 5.50 n.m.
