Report of the Economic Commission for Europe
Report of the Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific
Report of the Economic Commission for Africa
Report of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean
Report of the Economic and Social Commission for Western Asia
During its second regular session of 1986 the Economic and Social Council held three weeks of intense discussion and exchange of views on a variety of issues of major importance to the entire world community. There were similar perceptions on some of them and dissimilar perceptions on others. On some of the questions where similar positions exist, different remedies still tended to be prescribed. One could have wished that the various positions had been narrowed more than they were, that being the purpose of the session. But talking, and sometimes shouting, is better than throwing stones at one another.

I indicated in my opening statement that the Council could not have been more right when it chose, as a priority item, the interrelated issues of money, finance, resource flows, debt, trade, raw materials and development. When discussing those issues the Council was constantly reminded of the fact that some peoples and countries, especially in southern Africa and the Middle East, are still being denied their freedom and independence, that their dignity is still being trampled upon, that racism and racial discrimination, apartheid, aggression, and occupation and annexation of lands is still the order of the day in some parts of our world, and that women everywhere in the world have not yet seen their humanity fully recognized and respected.

Large imbalances in international trade and financial relations and net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries continued to recur in 1985. The downward slide in commodity prices, the worst the world has known since the Second World War, has endured some six years now. According to some reliable estimates, in 1984-1985 alone developing countries lost $65 billion owing to the fall in commodity prices. Although the terms of trade of developed countries are expected to improve by as much as 6.5 per cent in 1986 because of the sharp fall in oil prices, the improvement for energy-importing developing countries will be negligible. The developing world as a whole will experience an 18 per cent decline in its terms of trade.

The foreign exchange earnings of most developing countries will thus fall even further, their imports will decline, and their capacity to promote their economic and social development through income earned from exports will be reduced. Low-income developing countries, with their narrow productive base as exporters of mainly primary products, will be most acutely affected by this slump, which, we must recognize, is related to structural factors and not a temporary phenomenon.

Meanwhile, the fall in primary commodity prices in 1985 is supposed to have given developed countries a windfall gain. It is estimated that as much as a fifth to a quarter of the growth in real output in the industrialized countries during that year was due to gains in the terms of trade.

Vigorous and urgent measures must therefore be undertaken, both domestically and internationally, to reverse this negative trend with a view to stabilizing prices in the short to medium term and to diversifying the economies of developing countries in the long run so as to lessen their excessive dependence on dwindling and erratic incomes from a few primary commodities.

But moving away from dependence on primary products requires free and assured access to export markets. Protectionism limits this access. In the last five years, barriers, both tariff and non-tariff, have been erected everywhere. We urgently need measures on stand-still and roll-back, and on the reduction and elimination of quantitative and non-quantitative restrictions on raw materials, semi-manufactured and manufactured goods.
Because of increased interdependence, economies of developing countries are now more sensitive than ever to events in the financial markets of the market economies and the monetary and fiscal policies of those countries. Any changes in the domestic policies of an industrialized country may cause major disruptions in developing countries well beyond its borders. Some of the latter, however, may have already moved to the far reaches of the economic solar system, and special efforts may be needed to keep them in orbit. Otherwise, the pull may become so weak that they will continue to drift away, irrespective of the fact that the centre is experiencing good or bad fortune.

On the other hand the borders between the interrelated issues of money, finance, resource flows, debt, trade, raw materials and development that once seemed to be well delineated and defined have become so porous and diffused that today these issues almost overlap. Thus, the result of a debt rescheduling may be completely offset by adverse variations in interest and exchange rates.

Added to the unfavourable terms of trade is the heavy burden of external indebtedness and high real interest rates. Any adverse swing in interest rates considerably increases this burden. Interest payments alone were well above $70 billion in 1985, a record level, or about 10 per cent of all foreign debts owed by developing countries.

Parallel to this, inflows of bank lending, including international institutions, as well as official disbursements, have dramatically decreased; combined gross transfers in the form of loans, credits, official development assistance and direct investment amounted to $36 billion. Since 1983 we have been witnessing, on the contrary, an increase in the net flow of financial resources from developing to developed countries. This net capital outflow from developing countries was estimated to be in excess of $30 billion in 1985. At least 27 middle- and lower-income developing countries - of which a third are African and two are among the least developed countries - have been identified as having experienced a net capital outflow. For the last three years this reverse net transfer of financial resources is estimated to be over $100 billion. This shows that there is a clear need for major improvements in the functioning of the international financial, monetary and market system.

The co-ordination of macro-economic policies that has lately taken place in the major industrialized countries has an important impact not only on the volatility and alignment of major-currency exchange rates but also on the whole world economy, including developing countries. Although at first sight there seems to be a better alignment of major currencies, serious problems persist in unemployment, trade and financial markets and protectionism.

There must be a recognition in fact that every country, be it big or small, powerful or not, has a stake in the proper functioning of the world economy. From this it follows that every nation must be given a say on the most essential economic and financial issues affecting it. In other words, it is imperative that there be more just and equitable economic rules. From time to time, this may call for structural reforms and readjustment in all countries, developing and developed, as well as in international economic and financial institutions.

It is gratifying to note, however, the growing recognition that adjustment programmes cannot be effective unless they command the support of Governments and of public opinion, and that this support can be forthcoming only if they take fully into account economic growth and the protection of basic human needs. This is of paramount importance if we wish to succeed in our quest for a solution to the present economic crisis.
Therefore, every country, especially an industrially developed one, is duty-bound, when formulating monetary and fiscal policy adjustment, to give careful consideration to the possible repercussions in other countries.

Better still, international concerted action is the most suitable kind. The United Nations in general, and the Economic and Social Council in particular, can fulfil an important function in this respect, serving as a forum for the harmonization of varying and competing interests.

One way of embarking on this enterprise would be an agreement on and the launching of global negotiations on the most acute world economic issues of our times. On the other hand, all countries, particularly the major world military powers, could consider freezing and reducing their spending on armaments, especially by resisting the temptation to exceed certain levels beyond which their security does not seem to be strengthened in a significant way. This would not only strengthen peace and security in the world but would also release a considerable amount of resources for economic development and raising standards of life. The amount spent in a year on armaments — of the order of $800 billion — would be more than adequate to cover the entire external debt of the developing countries.

The world community, under the ever tolerant umbrella of the United Nations, would thus embark on a most fruitful endeavour while at the same time fully recognizing and respecting the diversity in our social, cultural, economic and political outlook.

It is regrettable that at the close of this session we have hardly scratched the surface of our priority item. No one was, at any time, under any illusion that major strides could be made at this stage of our deliberations, but it is heartening to observe that we have agreed not only to continue them, but also to do so within the United Nations family.

The President of the Council and the Secretary-General made opening statements at the 21st meeting, on 2 July 1986. The general discussion took place at the 22nd to 34th meetings, from 3 to 11 July; an account of it is contained in the relevant summary records (E/1986/SR.22-34).

2. At its first regular session, the Council had invited delegations in their deliberations under agenda item 3 to have as the priority item "the interrelated issues of money, finance, resource flows, debt, trade, raw materials and development" (Decision 1986/121).

Opening statements

3. In his opening statement, the President of the Council recalled the right of all countries and peoples to enjoy freedom and independence and the commitment to maintaining international peace and security, principles that needed constant reaffirmation at a time of escalating tensions in southern Africa and other regions and little significant movement in arms reduction negotiations.

4. The interrelated issues of money, finance, resource flows, debt, trade, raw materials and development were the most delicate and crucial issues on the economic agenda. The Council was competent to make positive and concrete recommendations on them. Those issues were too serious to allow the Council's deliberations to be guided by short-sighted and egotistical policies. Individualism should give way to solidarity, and narrow-mindedness to vision and wisdom. A new approach was needed, based on a recognition of the intrinsic interdependence among those issues and the need to deal with them through multilateral co-operation.

5. The task of creating an atmosphere favourable to constructive relations and joint efforts in solving international economic problems was a major challenge. The Council's session should open on a positive note of renewed commitment by all, as it was convened shortly after the special session of the General Assembly on the critical economic situation in Africa and the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the United Nations.

6. In his opening statement, the Secretary-General said that while the world economy had recovered from the low point of the early 1980s, growth was modest and many imbalances persisted. At the Tokyo economic summit, industrial market countries had expressed satisfaction at current economic conditions and the improved investment climate resulting from lower oil prices and interest rates. But unemployment remained high, and acute payments imbalances and trade frictions none the less persisted. In the socialist countries, which were experiencing modest growth, the accent was on structural change.

7. Despite adjustment efforts, the developing countries, with few exceptions, continued to face serious difficulties as a result of low commodity prices, protectionism and insufficient finance. Oil exporters were in a critical situation. The heavy debt burden in a large number of countries was a problem that was far from resolved and had grave social and political consequences— a dangerous situation for the world as a whole.

8. New approaches to those problems had been broached but had to be put into action. The industrial countries had a particular responsibility. The Secretary-General stressed four lines of action:

(a) Debt and finance. Many proposals had been made for sharing the debt burden more equitably, but action was insufficient. More public funds, lower interest rates and, in some cases, write-offs were required, as was political leadership.

(b) Commodities. Low commodity prices had aggravated the debt burden. The Integrated Programme for Commodities needed to be implemented, and compensatory financing facilities needed to be enlarged. It was time to address the question of long-term stability in the energy sector, a matter that the Economic and Social Council was well suited to take up.

(c) Trade. Protectionism and ensuring trade disputes were also damaging world growth and investment; developing countries were suffering as a result. Progress on the textiles issue would create a positive atmosphere for a new round of multilateral trade negotiations.

(d) Steadier economic growth in the industrial countries. Several industrial countries were well placed to provide stimulus to the world economy. The objective of employment creation should be restored to a position on a par with the fight against inflation.

9. The Secretary-General went on to underline the role of the United Nations in dealing with those interrelated issues and the need to move towards action, including action by the General Assembly. He drew the attention of delegations to the forthcoming special conference of the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean to be held in Mexico City in December 1986 and the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD).

10. Referring to the recent adoption of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990, the Secretary-General emphasized the primary responsibility of the Governments of African countries in its implementation. But, he stated, the current situation called for an early improvement of the international economic environment. He mentioned a number of specific actions in the areas of finance and commodities. The Secretary-General pledged the United Nations system to assist fully in the implementation of the programme.

11. The Secretary-General pointed to the wide support for the operational activities of the system. He went on to reflect on the efficiency of the United Nations. It was necessary to review continually the future content and course of its work, especially in the light of financial constraints. He expressed appreciation for the efforts already made by the Council but stressed that more had to be done, especially to strengthen co-operation. It was essential to improve the complementarity between the Economic and Social Council, the Trade and Development Board and the General Assembly and to co-ordinate their general debates on economic and social issues.
12. Both the intergovernmental machinery and the secretariat required streamlining. The Council should more actively exercise its co-ordination functions, the performance of which would benefit from greater participation by the specialized agencies in its work. Similarly, links with non-governmental organizations and the press should be strengthened.

13. In concluding, the Secretary-General referred to the recent celebration of the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations. On that occasion many leaders and statesmen had reaffirmed the importance of strengthening multilateral co-operation through the United Nations. Economic and social progress was inextricably linked to peace and security, disarmament and human rights. The tasks ahead required courageous thinking, bold vision and political leadership. The Council needed to assume fully the role foreseen for it in the Charter.

General discussion

14. The general discussion focused on three topics: the current economic situation and prospects for the world economy; the interrelatedness of policy issues in the fields of money, finance, resource flows, debt, trade, raw materials and development; and the role of the United Nations in enhancing international co-operation in those interrelated fields.

World economic situation

15. Many delegations noted that the performance of the world economy in 1985 and early 1986 had been disappointing. World trade, after increasing by nearly 9 per cent in 1984, grew by only 3.2 per cent in 1985 and was expected to grow by some 4 per cent in 1986. Delegations from developed market economies expressed cautious optimism based on the prolongation of their recovery, which, in some instances, was in its fourth year. Most developing countries, however, were unable to share that limited optimism, as the recovery was by and large unrelated to their own experience.

16. In developed market economies, non-inflationary growth continued in 1985, but at a rate of 2.7 per cent as compared with 4.8 per cent in 1984. Forecasts for 1986 presented in the course of the general discussion pointed to a rate of growth of 3 per cent or slightly less.

17. Many delegations expressed the view that sustained growth in the world economy required a reactivation of the development process in developing countries. Many referred to the analysis contained in the World Economic Survey 1986, which, despite its emphasis on the diversity of experience in the developing world, showed that in 1985 49 developing countries - with a total population of more than 700 million - had stagnant or declining real incomes per capita. 1/

18. The continuing crisis in Africa received particular attention. Despite some modest improvements in 1985, average per capita income there was less than it had been in 1970. Many delegations from both developed and developing countries regarded the special session of the General Assembly on Africa as a major achievement in international co-operation.

1/ United Nations publication, Sales No. E.86.II.C.1, table II.2.
19. The extent to which economic and social conditions had deteriorated in many developing countries was sobering. The deterioration was detailed in the reports presented to the Council and in the statements made by representatives of the organizations of the United Nations system, in particular the executive heads of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the United Nations Industrial Development Organization (UNIDO). The predominant assessment that emerged from the various analyses was that the prospects for an early reactivation of the development process were relatively bleak overall. In presenting the Trade and Development Report, 1986, the Secretary-General of UNCTAD stated that, even allowing for the recent changes in the world economy, the external environment for development was no less unfavourable than it had been a year ago.

20. No country denied that developing countries should seek more self-reliant development or undertake economic readjustment of some inter alia sectors and policies. None the less, it was widely agreed that self-reliant development would be impossible to attain without international co-operation and a more favourable international environment. It was noted that the industrial countries could go a long way towards creating that environment if broad objectives were translated into concrete policy actions.

Money and finance

21. A significant number of delegations stressed the weaknesses of the international monetary system and indicated that there was clearly a need for major improvements in its functioning. While international co-operation had been successful in dealing with crises, it had failed to bring about exchange rate stability and to regulate international liquidity. Some countries felt that progress had been made in the past year, mentioning the joint action taken by the Group of Five to establish a more balanced pattern of exchange rates, reduce interest rates and strengthen multilateral surveillance within the framework of IMF.

22. Several appeals were made for more systematic and structured discussion of those matters, not only by delegations strongly supporting an international conference on money and finance. One delegation, speaking on behalf of several developed market economies, noted that the discussion should not preclude any options.

23. Two core issues were identified: (a) the exchange rate system; and (b) the provision and management of international liquidity, including the allocation of special drawing rights. With respect to the exchange rate system, many delegations said that wide fluctuations in exchange rates had not sent the proper signals for correcting disequilibria but had added to the uncertainties of trading and investment. Other delegations pointed to progress recently achieved in this area through policy co-ordination. With respect to international liquidity, many delegations, particularly from developing countries, stated that they faced major disruptions whenever there were large and adverse swings in international interest rates or in the flow of bank lending. Such fluctuations in the cost and availability of international finance, including concessional flows, made it impossible to plan for orderly medium-term adjustment and explained why resort to large cuts in investment and to import restrictions had become widespread.

2/ United Nations publication, Sales No. E.86.II.D.5.
24. The need for consistent and complementary action in the trading and monetary and financial systems was widely recognized. One delegation from a major industrial country said that the attainment of stability in exchange markets required a comprehensive approach to all the related issues.

25. Many delegations emphasized that the large domestic and international imbalances prevailing in the world economy could not be tackled by national policies alone but required broadly based international co-operation and concerted policy action.

Trade

26. Many delegations noted that protectionism had increased in the industrial countries and that it had mostly taken the form of non-tariff barriers and increased recourse to bilateral, sector-specific trade restraints. Many delegations emphasized the need for a general reassertion of global multilateral principles.

27. The proposed new round of multilateral trade negotiations was discussed by a large number of delegations. It was pointed out that countries should be prevailed upon to observe more strictly the obligations which they had already accepted under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. That task could not await the conclusion of negotiations. One group of developed market economies was of the view that an effective commitment to a comprehensive standstill in trade restrictions should be an integral part of the decision to launch a new round. One delegation from a major developed market economy said that existing commitments to halt or reverse protectionism must be carried out and declared that his country was ready, along with other industrialized countries, to completely eliminate tariffs on industrial products in the course of a new round.

28. Many delegations from developing countries noted that the implementation of the work programme agreed on in 1982 by the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) had been entirely inadequate and that prospects for a new round would be contingent on the commitment to a standstill and roll-back of protectionist measures. Some delegations noted that the proposed new round must cover more adequately than in the past issues of interest to both smaller industrial countries and developing countries, such as agriculture, subsidies, safeguards, textiles and tariff escalation.

29. With regard to the so-called new areas, such as services, many delegations from developing countries stated their views that those areas should not be discussed, since they were outside the competence of GATT. On the other hand, many delegations from developed countries expressed their views about the need to bring into the GATT system new realities in international trade and international investment. One group of countries stressed the need for the full participation of all countries in discussions on the international trading system, they were ready to participate in the forthcoming round of multilateral trade negotiations to ensure that their outcome would be of a truly universal and global nature.

Raw materials

30. International commodity markets had been marked by depression and instability throughout the 1980s. Delegations from a large number of countries noted that the disarray in commodity markets was one of several negative trends in the external economic environment that had adversely affected or even halted the adjustment efforts of developing countries. It had been especially devastating for a large number of smaller developing countries that depended on exports of primary commodities as the sole source of their foreign exchange earnings.

31. Many delegations expressed the view that the depressed state of commodity prices was a worrying, seemingly intractable phenomenon, which pre-dated and had outlived the world economic recession. There appeared to be little prospect of early improvement. The structural aspects were rooted in changing patterns of demand in industrial economies. The situation was also indicative of a lingering deflationary tendency in international economic policy. The collapse of several international commodity agreements, and the inability to renegotiate those that had expired, had contributed to a loss of confidence in traditionally acceptable forms of international co-operation in that field.

32. Some delegations from industrial countries indicated that their country's ratification of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities showed an understanding of the difficulties facing developing countries. Other delegations from developed market economies acknowledged that, to the extent weak commodity prices could be attributed to policies of protection in their economies, the situation was unacceptable.

33. Developed and developing countries alike called for an innovative approach to international commodity policy issues. Without abandoning those useful mechanisms which already existed, it was necessary to pursue more actively strategies that would improve market prospects. Developing countries needed greater encouragement, in particular support from international financial institutions, to diversify products and develop marketing, processing and distribution facilities. Increasingly, raw material-intensive industries were located in developing countries. That suggested the need to consider ways of expanding the economies of developing countries that incorporated their resource base and to promote economic co-operation among developing countries. The responsibilities of the developed countries included resolutely tackling their own structural problems in ways that would rationalize world trade and open up world markets.

34. Several delegations stressed that emerging trends in commodities should be studied and higher priority given to commodities on the international agenda, particularly at the forthcoming meeting of the Development Committee of the World Bank and IMF and at the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development.

35. The recent change in world energy markets was subject to differing interpretations arising from individual national policy orientation and experience. In the view of developing countries, the sudden drop in oil prices had created both advantages and problems for oil importers, even as it had affected, much more seriously, the oil producers. The plausible range of oil prices in the coming months remained wide, and both exporting and importing countries would be facing serious difficulties in formulating policies.

36. In contrast, developed market economies saw in the coincidence of successful anti-inflation and adjustment policies with the decline of oil prices, the prospect of continued and stable growth. Some countries did not share the view that lower oil prices worked against the developing world. There was no denying, however, that the current market situation would not last forever. Many delegations stressed that better predictability and the promotion of long-term stability in the energy market were in the interests of all countries, producers as well as Consumers. Continuing efforts were needed to explore for and develop energy resources, including new and renewable resources, and to improve energy efficiency.

37. The inclusion of raw materials and energy in the priority theme for the general discussion signified to some the need to consider how the gains accruing to developed market economies at the expense of the developing countries - on the order of $50 billion of implicit transfers in the form of lower commodity prices in 1985 and another $60 billion in the form of lower energy costs in 1986 - could be spread to promote equitable growth in the world economy.

Debt and resource flows

38. Delegations discussed extensively the links between the debt problems of developing countries and the slump in commodity prices, barriers to trade, high real interest rates, uncertainties in foreign exchange markets, and the collapse of commercial bank lending to developing countries. It was emphasized by many speakers, from both industrial and developing countries, as well as such organizations as the United Nations Children's Fund and IMF, that the debt problem was not only an economic and financial issue but also a political and social one. A solution required the resumption of growth in both creditor and debtor countries. An increased flow of finance was needed to allow for the necessary investment and reverse the net flow of financial resources out of developing countries.

39. Frequent reference was made to the Baker initiative of the plan introduced by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States of America at the annual meetings of the World Bank and IMF in October 1985, which called for a framework of co-responsibility involving Governments of debtor and creditor countries, commercial banks and international financial institutions to revive the financial flows to developing countries. But it was clear that opinions diverged on the immediate steps to be taken. Some delegations from industrial countries stressed, above all, the need for further adjustment and domestic policy reforms in debtor countries in order to restore credit worthiness. Others emphasized the need to replenish the resources of the International Development Association at a higher level, to enlarge the resources of the World Bank and IMF, to bring down international interest rates, to generalize multi-year rescheduling, and to undertake more extensive debt relief.

40. Many speakers urged the enlargement of the resources available to the Compensatory Financing Facility of IMF and Stabex, as well as other arrangements being discussed in UNCTAD to meet shortfalls in commodity earnings. A proposal was made - by the Director-General of FAO - to make the Second Account of the Common Fund for Commodities operational on a provisional basis so that its funds could be used for projects to promote diversification.

41. Several delegations, particularly from developing countries, referred to the analysis in the World Economic Survey 1986 showing that there had been an increasing net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries, on the order of $30 billion in 1985 alone. 3/ The proposal of the Committee for Development Planning for a doubling of development finance by 1990 to reactivate the development process in developing countries was mentioned by several delegations as deserving close attention. Other delegations stressed the importance of domestic policies in indebted countries and the need for growth-oriented structural adjustment in all countries as the only lasting solution to debt problems.

42. Although the Baker Plan was welcomed as a new approach, it was clear that much doubt remained concerning its implementation. It was also clear from the statements that there was a growing recognition of the interrelationship of the debt problem with issues in the fields of money, finance and trade.

Multilateral co-operation and the role of the United Nations

43. The need for international co-operation was strongly reasserted. It was stressed that the economic deliberations had contributed to a better understanding of the interdependence between nations of the linkages between the various interrelated issues. Some delegations expressed the view that the international economic debate was moving closer to a consensus that for each country and the international community, an integrated approach was necessary to solve the problems of development, trade and finance. There was support on the part of some delegations for dealing with these issues in a comprehensive and systematic, rather than a piecemeal manner.

44. Some delegations from developed market economies cited developments taking place in several multilateral forums as indications that multilateralism was not being eroded as claimed by many other delegations. The special session of the General Assembly on Africa was mentioned by a number of delegations as evidence of the positive role the United Nations could play.

45. Delegations stressed the broad responsibilities of the Economic and Social Council under the Charter of the United Nations to take a comprehensive view of the world economic situation. One delegation, on behalf of many developed market economies, recalled that the Council might make recommendations to the General Assembly, to Member States and to the specialized agencies concerned. It might co-ordinate the activities of the specialized agencies and obtain reports from them. No other body was mandated to consider world economic questions overall.

46. Another delegation, speaking on behalf of many countries, stressed the unique role of the United Nations as a universal forum for negotiations with a view to promoting solutions to economic and social problems in the interests of the international community as a whole. It regretted the practice whereby a small group of developed countries acting outside the established multilateral institutions of the United Nations system took decisions that were of concern to the entire world and that were vital to the future of the international monetary, financial and trading systems.

47. Several delegations, particularly from centrally planned economies but from developing countries, as well, strongly emphasized the links between disarmament and development. The release of resources employed in armaments production and an improved international political situation would contribute enormously to the reactivation of the development process and the improvement of standards of living throughout the world. That should be part of a larger process of strengthening peace and international security. In that context, one major socialist country proposed the convening of a world congress on problems of economic security. The interdependence of all countries made it necessary to seek international economic security in order to ensure that the national economic policy of all States would be protected from unfavourable external conditions. It was emphasized that international economic security should be the subject of a constructive discussion at the forty-first session of the General Assembly.

67. At the 35th meeting, on 17 July, the representative of the United States of America, on behalf of Canada, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Japan, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States, introduced a draft resolution (E/1986/L.36) entitled "The role of entrepreneurship in promoting economic development". Subsequently, Iceland and Italy joined in sponsoring the draft resolution, which read as follows:
"The Economic and Social Council,

"Recalling the importance of mobilizing resources for development as well as full utilization of human resources potential, as emphasized in the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade,"

"Recalling also Economic and Social Council resolution 1985/10 of 28 May 1985 on public administration and finance for development and General Assembly resolution 34/137 of 14 December 1979 on the role of the public sector in promoting economic development,

"Convinced that entrepreneurship and individual initiative play an important role in mobilizing national resources and promoting economic growth and development,

"Acknowledging that government attitudes play a key role in encouraging an entrepreneurial spirit and promoting more dynamic economic growth and development in all countries,

"Confident that the active promotion of entrepreneurship and individual initiative can contribute to the expansion of economic activity in all sectors of the economy,

Further confident that international and national organizations can play a supportive role in this regard,

"1. Affirms the importance of promoting entrepreneurship and individual initiative as a means of mobilizing national resources and encouraging development;

"2. Invites the United Nations Development Programme and other competent organizations of the United Nations system to support, through technical cooperation projects, the efforts of interested States in encouraging entrepreneurship, providing incentives in all sectors of the economy, and promoting private enterprise;

"3. Requests the Secretary-General to prepare a study on the role of entrepreneurship in promoting economic development and to submit, through the Economic and Social Council, a report thereon to the forty-second session of the General Assembly paying special attention to the following aspects:

"(a) The role of entrepreneurship and individual initiative in mobilizing national resources, setting priorities, and participating in economic and social growth and development;

"Recalling General Assembly resolution 2626 (XXV) of 24 October 1970 setting forth the International Development Strategy for the Second United Nations Development Decade, the first instrument to include as an objective the full integration of women in the total development effort,

"Recalling also General Assembly resolutions 3342 (XXIX) of 17 December 1974, 3505 (XXX) of 15 December 1976, 33/200 of 29 January 1979, 34/204 of 29 December 1979, 35/78 of 5 December 1980, 36/74 of 4 December 1981, 39/172 of 17 December 1984 and 40/204 of 19 December 1985 concerning the effective mobilization and integration of women in development,

"Emphasizing the vital importance to national economic growth and development of the effective mobilization and integration of women in all sectors of economic life,

"Conscious that the economic value of women's contribution to overall growth and development has yet to be fully recognized,

"Aware that, in its resolution 40/108 of 13 December 1985, the General Assembly invited intergovernmental organizations to give high priority to the implementation of the Nairobi Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women and, in particular, to ensure that sectoral policies and programmes for development included strategies to promote the participation of women as agents and beneficiaries on an equal basis with men, and that it requested those organizations to report periodically through the Commission on the Status of Women to the Economic and Social Council on the activities undertaken at all levels to implement the Forward-looking Strategies.

"Considering that the measures to integrate women effectively in all aspects of development outlined in chapter II of the Forward-looking Strategies have major implications for the work programmes of the United Nations and the specialized agencies, in particular in the economic sector,

"Concerned that the proposed revisions to the medium-term plan for the period 1984-1989 do not take into account the legislative mandate to integrate women in economic development activities, projects and programmes provided by the World Conference to Review and Appraise the Achievements of the United Nations Decade for Women: Equality, Development and Peace and by the General Assembly in its resolution 40/108,

"Bearing in mind the recent initiatives taken by the Governing Council of the United Nations Development Programme, the Executive Board of the United Nations Children's Fund, the Commission on Human Settlements, the Intergovernmental Committee on Science and Technology for Development, the Committee on the Development and Utilization of New and Renewable Sources of Energy, the Economic Commission for Europe, the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean and the Economic Commission for Africa, as well as by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the World Health Organization, to take into account the relevant recommendations of the Forward-looking Strategies when drawing up their respective programmes of work,

"Noting paragraph 338 of the Forward-looking Strategies, in which the Economic and Social Council is encouraged to play a more forceful and dynamic role in reviewing and co-ordinating all relevant activities of the United Nations system in the field of women's issues,

"1. Requests the Secretary-General:

"(a) To propose recommendations for the implementation of those measures contained in chapter II of the Forward-looking Strategies that relate to programmes of work of the United Nations in such economic fields as development issues and policies, energy, the environment, food and agriculture, human settlements, industrial development, international trade and development finance, natural resources, science and technology, statistics, and transport and communications, in order to provide overall policy guidelines for effective programme planning to integrate women in economic development;

"(b) To include in his instructions for the preparation of the proposed programme budget for the biennium 1988-1989 a reminder to programme managers in the area of economic development to take the Forward-looking Strategies into account.

intO account when preparing their programme proposals and to ensure that the necessary checks are applied during the review of the proposals to determine that the instructions have been followed.

"(c) To take account of the implications of the Forward-looking Strategies for policy formulation in all sectors of economic development when preparing the draft medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995;

"(d) To prepare an intersectoral analysis of the various United Nations programmes dealing with women, with cross-referencing to related work of all other organizations of the United Nations system, to accompany the medium-term plan for the period 1990-1995;

2. Also requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate steps, in particular for the period 1987-1990, to implement chapter V of the Forward-looking Strategies on international and regional co-operation, taking into account the need to assess the performance, achievements and effectiveness of the work of the United Nations system in integrating women in economic development activities by means of technical co-operation, training and advisory services, research and policy analysis and the dissemination of information.

"3. Requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to make the necessary arrangements for the effective, system-wide implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies in the economic field, including the designation of a focal point within his Office, and to ensure that specific measures are taken to co-ordinate the application of the Strategies at the regional and international levels, taking particular account of the need:

"(a) To ensure coherence among approaches to the implementation of the Forward-looking Strategies by central, regional and sectoral bodies;

"(b) To provide to all appropriate United Nations bodies, on a regular basis, a compilation of all intergovernmental mandates concerning women;

"(d) To assign, within existing resources, specific responsibility within his Office for the co-ordination of the integration of women in economic development;

4. Also requests the Director-General for Development and International Economic Co-operation to make the necessary arrangements to ensure that the Administrative Committee on Co-operation considers:

"(a) How to co-ordinate both programme and co-ordination activities concerning women and development; in particular, whether the present arrangements are sufficient or need to be improved;
(b) The regular inclusion in the agenda of both the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Programme Matters) and the Consultative Committee on Substantive Questions (Operational Activities) an item on the integration of women in development;

4. Requests the Secretary-General to include in his report to be submitted to the General Assembly at its forty-first session in accordance with Assembly resolution 40/108 a section on the implementation of paragraphs 1 and 2 above and to submit a report on the implementation of paragraphs 3 and 4 above to the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1987."

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Recalling General Assembly resolution 2816 (XXVI) of 14 December 1971, by which the Assembly established the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and by which it, inter alia, recognized the need to ensure prompt, effective and efficient responses in times of natural and other disaster situations that would bring to bear the resources of the United Nations system, prospective donor countries and voluntary agencies,

"Recalling also General Assembly resolution 36/225 of 17 December 1981, by which the Assembly reaffirmed the mandate of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, called for the strengthening and improvement of the capacity and effectiveness of the Office, and stressed the need to ensure prompt delivery of concerted relief through an efficient and effective co-ordination system of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance,

"Recalling further General Assembly resolution 37/144 of 17 December 1982 and other relevant resolutions and decisions, including Economic and Social Council resolutions 1983/47 of 28 July 1983 and 1984/60 of 26 July 1984, in which the Assembly and the Council, inter alia, stressed the need to strengthen and improve the capacity and effectiveness of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in order to attain an effective co-ordination system of humanitarian and disaster relief assistance, and recognizing that, as a result of those resolutions and decisions, there is now in place a workable system to promote, facilitate and co-ordinate relief activities carried out by the United Nations system, in co-operation with Governments and voluntary agencies,

"Convinced that the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator is in a unique position, given adequate staff and facilities, to provide a world-wide system of mobilizing and co-ordinating disaster relief, including the collection and dissemination of information on disaster assessment, priority needs and donor assistance,

"Recognizing in this connection the importance of the contribution of the International Committee of the Red Cross, the League of Red Cross Societies and appropriate voluntary organizations,
"Recognizing also that the primary responsibility for administration, relief operations and disaster preparedness lies with the affected countries and that the major part of the material assistance and human effort in disaster relief comes from the Governments of those countries,

"Deeply concerned about the additional economic burden placed upon the developing countries by the ever-increasing number of devastating natural disasters and other disaster situations, as well as the disruption caused to their development process,

"Appreciating the contributions made by donors in supporting international relief operations, including those made to the Trust Fund of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

"Recognizing that shortage of resources has been a major constraint on an effective response of the United Nations to disaster situations, and continues to hamper the full achievement of the aim of a rapid and effective response to the needs of countries affected by disasters and that, if the shortage is to be overcome, further efforts will be required by the international community to provide both funds and assistance in kind,

"Recalling in this regard General Assembly resolution 35/107 of 5 December 1980, in which the Assembly reaffirmed the necessity of ensuring a continued sound financial basis for the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator,

"Noting with appreciation that the agreements between the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator and other organizations of the United Nations system, including the United Nations Development Programme, which define areas and means of co-operation, have helped to strengthen the collective response of the United Nations system to disasters,

"2. Reaffirms the sovereignty of individual Member States, recognizes the primary role of each State in caring for the victims of disasters occurring in its territory and stresses that all relief operations should be carried out and co-ordinated in a manner consistent with the priorities and needs of the countries concerned, and that the material and other assistance provided by the international community should be appropriate to the particular needs of the populations of the disaster-affected areas;

"3. Recognizes the importance of disaster preparedness and prevention activities, and calls upon the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, Governments and organizations concerned to ensure that due priority attention is given to them;

"4. 5. Authorizes the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to play an active role as an executing agency of the United Nations Development Programme, in all disaster preparedness activities of the United Nations;

6. Reiterates its call to all Governments and competent organs and organizations to co-operate with the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator in order to improve, in particular, the flow of information to Governments and organizations concerned, so that a more complete picture of relief activities, assistance received and further requirements may be provided to all concerned;

7. Calls upon those contributing assistance in kind to provide, when appropriate, special grants to cover the costs of transport and distribution of the assistance to and within the affected country;

8. Requests the Secretary-General and the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to intensify their efforts to mobilize additional voluntary resources to meet the needs arising from complex disasters and emergencies of exceptional magnitude;

9. Appeals to Governments for urgent voluntary contributions, channelled directly or through the Trust Fund of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator, to enable the Office to cover, inter alia, unforeseen expenses in connection with disaster relief operations;

10. Recommends that, as the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator phases out his emergency co-ordination responsibility in a given country, he should contribute to ensuring the necessary transition to the rehabilitation and reconstruction phase by passing on relevant data to competent organs and agencies of the United Nations system;

11. Emphasizes the essential need for the work of the Office of the United Nations Disaster Relief Co-ordinator to be placed and kept on a sound financial basis, and calls upon the international community to respond positively and expeditiously to the appeals of the Secretary-General for contributions to the Trust Fund to meet natural disasters and other disaster situations, to enable the Office to cover, inter alia, unforeseen expenses in connection with disaster relief operations and to realize the purposes set out in the report of the Secretary-General on the activities of the Office;

12. Requests the Secretary-General to submit a report on the implementation of the present resolution to the General Assembly at its forty-third session through the Economic and Social Council at its second regular session of 1988."

"1. Reaffirms that the basic purpose of technical co-operation should be the promotion of the self-reliance of developing countries by building up, inter alia, their productive capability and their indigenous resources and by increasing the availability of the managerial, technical, administrative and research capabilities required in the development process;

2. Reaffirms further the sovereign rights of the Governments concerned in formulating their national development plan, priorities and objectives as well as their country programme;

Stressing the importance of development assistance loans and grants being untied to the maximum extent possible,

Recognizing the positive role a central depository of development assistance information at the national level could play in enhancing the ability of donors to co-ordinate their assistance efforts more effectively,

Convinced that greater transparency and comparability of assistance flows would greatly enhance the ability of donors to co-ordinate their efforts, avoid duplication and further improve the responsiveness of assistance to the needs and priorities of developing countries,

Bearing in mind that co-ordination of external assistance is the task of recipient countries in exercise of their right of sovereignty,

1. Appeals all donors to provide full information to United Nations resident co-ordinators on their country-by-country breakdown of development assistance efforts, including the cost, nature and objective of each project, based upon agreed uniform and transparent formats;
