Chapter II

GENERAL DISCUSSION OF INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL POLICY, INCLUDING REGIONAL AND SECTORAL DEVELOPMENTS

1. The Economic and Social Council held a general discussion of international economic and social policy, including regional and sectoral developments, at its second regular session of 1987 (agenda item 3). The President of the Council and the Secretary-General made opening statements at the 20th meeting, on 23 June 1987. The general discussion took place at the 21st to 30th, 32nd and 33rd meetings, from 24 to 26 and on 29 and 30 June and from 1 to 3 July; an account of it is contained in the relevant summary records (E/1987/SR.21-30, 32 and 33).

Opening statements

2. In his opening statement, the President of the Council stressed that increased interdependence among countries had placed on the international agenda a growing number of problems that could not be resolved by individual nations, making it essential to use more fully the existing mechanisms of international dialogue and collaboration. The external debt of many countries, protection of the environment, the exploration and exploitation of outer space and sea-bed resources, ensuring adequate supplies of energy and raw materials, rapid population growth and widespread hunger and malnutrition were among the issues that required enhanced international co-operation. Since the resolution of many of those problems required additional resources, a reversal of the arms race would be of benefit to all. The arms race in all countries, both large and small, diverted human and material resources that could be used for social and economic development.

3. There was reason to be encouraged, however, by the new phase in the dialogue between the Soviet Union and the United States of America on crucial disarmament questions. It was important to restore mutual confidence in order to achieve greater security for every State in its external economic relations. Greater economic security on an international scale would in turn help to bring trade and financial flows more into line with development needs.

4. The Economic and Social Council was the proper forum for dealing with those needs. In fact, the Council had an even broader mandate to seek solutions to global problems and promote the well-being and economic development of all countries. It was thus important to seize the opportunity provided by the work being undertaken pursuant to the decision of the General Assembly to conduct an in-depth study of the United Nations intergovernmental structure and functions in the economic and social fields. A proper streamlining of the activities of the Organization would make it a more effective centre for international co-operation in solving problems of an economic, social, cultural and humanitarian nature.

5. In his address to the Council, the Secretary-General pointed out that a measure of progress had been made in a number of economic areas. The process of consultation and co-ordination among major market economies had improved. There had been a significant realignment of the dollar versus other key currencies and a decline in international interest rates. Many developing countries were pursuing courageous adjustment programmes. Several developing countries, including the largest, had recorded rapid growth in 1986, while net material product in the centrally planned economies of Eastern Europe had risen by more than 4 per cent.

6. In spite of these improvements, however, the current state of the world economy and the outlook for its immediate future were deeply disturbing. The World Economic Survey 1987 identified several dangerous implications of present trends. The global economy seemed to be set on a slow growth path, and there was considerable risk that growth might slow down further. The risk stemmed from the persistence of large external and internal imbalances, unstable exchange rates, a high degree of uncertainty in financial and capital markets, mounting protectionist pressures and the depressed state of the commodity markets. Moreover, it was of particular concern that in heavily indebted developing countries and in most of the commodity-exporting countries adjustment continued to take the form of severe contraction.

7. The weakening of primary commodity markets seemed to be a long-term trend and posed acute problems for the majority of developing countries. According to the World Economic Survey 1987, the terms-of-trade losses of developing countries in 1986 were of the order of $90 billion. The flow of resources into developing countries had been abruptly curtailed in recent years, leaving many of those countries facing a negative cash flow just when they needed trade surpluses to pay the interest on their debts. The situation was depressing developed economies as well. Thus, consideration had to be given to redirecting part of the large financial surpluses of some industrialized countries to developing countries, particularly through multilateral institutions. Action was necessary to relieve the debt burden that weighed so heavily on many developing countries, especially in Africa and Latin America.

8. The Secretary-General expressed his concern at the failure of the international community to provide adequate support, particularly as regards financing, for the structural adjustment efforts that African countries were undertaking in the context of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990. That failure could jeopardize domestic actions to place African economies on the road to development. He had established the Advisory Group on Financial Flows for Africa to examine the matter and expected to receive its report by the end of the year.

9. The Secretary-General called the attention of the Council to the fact that sufficient attention still was not being paid to emerging social issues and their consequences. The aging of populations was perhaps one of the most serious demographic issues of our time, as was youth unemployment. The full integration of women in the development process remained more a potential than a reality.

10. While on the whole the picture was bleak, the Secretary-General was optimistic in noting that the international community had the capacity to overcome its difficulties. A new round of trade negotiations was under way in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). It was encouraging that the Venice economic summit meeting had dealt with a broad range of questions, particularly since constructive solutions had been reached to some of them. At their recent meeting, the States parties to the Warsaw Treaty had also taken up questions relating to the elimination of underdevelopment. Immediately after the second regular session of the Economic and Social Council, the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) was being convened. It would offer an opportunity for all Governments to work constructively towards a meeting of minds and concrete results on key issues.

11. In identifying the challenges of the future, the Secretary-General stressed that the international agenda should include the whole range of common interests that offered real promise for constructive joint action. Our knowledge of the interaction between economic activity and ecological systems had increased enormously and a better reconciliation of economic, social and environmental goals was needed. A dogmatic distinction should not be made between economic and social development. Social progress and the development of human resources were both a means towards and an end of development.

12. In international relations, traditionally the preserve of national Governments, international companies and banks had become important factors, as had many important organizations of scientists and specialists and the even more numerous organizations of ordinary men and women engaged in such causes as fighting famine and poverty, promoting development at the grass-roots level and building a world-wide constituency for peace. Moreover, the speed with which changes were occurring in the international economy had complicated the search for economic security. A measure of stability and predictability, including the observance of agreed rules of behaviour, was necessary to the orderly conduct of international transactions. Governments had to face the task of reconciling the imperatives for both change and stability.

13. A vision of the future was also needed to guide the current efforts to restructure the United Nations. The financial viability of the Organization would not be secure until all Member States agreed to meet promptly and in full their financial obligations as set out in the Charter of the United Nations. He had been following closely the work of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields. He was impressed by the seriousness of purpose and commitment shown by its members as they undertook their tasks. The fundamental purpose of the United Nations was to provide a forum for Member States to meet, to exchange views and, in the words of the Charter, "to be a centre for harmonizing the actions of nations". In streamlining its overall structure it was of critical importance to preserve the capacity of the United Nations to serve as a meeting place of the world, a place where countries could share their views and seek common solutions to problems.

14. The Council had already taken important measures to enhance efficiency, but more needed to be done. The effort had to be extended to all intergovernmental bodies in the economic and social fields. The careful scheduling of meetings, greater selectivity in establishing agenda, biennialization, better co-ordination in the consideration of a question by various bodies, the elimination of duplicative debates and other such improvements in procedure would enhance the usefulness of deliberations and the quality of substantive conclusions. Also, co-ordination and co-operation among the various secretariats were crucial. But it was not enough to promote co-ordination at the United Nations level, and even less at the United Nations Secretariat level, unless a parallel effort was made within the Governments of Member States to harmonize the positions taken by their representatives in the various intergovernmental forums.
15. There was also a need for a clearer division of labour between the Economic and Social Council and the General Assembly. Substantive deliberations in the Council should serve as a basis for identifying major policy issues that should be brought to the attention of the General Assembly. That approach would imply that the subsidiary intergovernmental bodies should serve as forums for specialized consideration of various sectoral issues. The regional commissions, in addition to their regular responsibilities, would have a critical role in advising on issues from their particular geographical perspective. The Council could thus play its role as the central forum, ensuring that all relevant contributions from regional commissions, subsidiary bodies and other entities of the United Nations system were considered. That would facilitate a coherent, interdisciplinary approach to problems and assist in defining the issues to be considered by the General Assembly. With regard to operational activities, the Council could discuss ways of consolidating the consideration of all reports of the relevant organizations so as to provide a comprehensive overview of the operational activities of the United Nations system in treating issues of common concern. It could also prove useful to consider the establishment of a standing committee of the Council to deal with operational activities.

General discussion

16. The general discussion on economic trends focused on the current world economic situation, the interaction of economic and social phenomena, the short-term to medium-term outlook and the policy initiatives required at the domestic and international levels to achieve sustained growth and development, particularly in developing countries. International trade and resource transfer questions figured prominently in the deliberations. Food and agriculture, the development of human resources and the role of women, the environment, the role of multilateral co-operation and co-ordination and the streamlining of United Nations activities in the economic and social fields - in the Council, in particular - also received special attention from a large number of delegations.

The economic outlook

17. There was widespread concern about the unsatisfactory state of the world economy. Although the rate of inflation had been reduced and nominal interest rates had decreased in 1986, economic growth in most countries remained modest and international trade sluggish. Two particularly disturbing features were the high unemployment levels in many developing countries and most European market economies and the still negative rate of increase in the per capita gross domestic product of the majority of developing countries. It was noted, however, that several developing countries, especially the most populous countries in Asia, had experienced a rate of economic growth well above that of industrialized countries. That was seen as an encouraging development. A number of representatives stressed the importance of drawing the appropriate lessons from the divergent performance of those developing countries.

18. In the opinion of many delegations, the heavy debt burden of developing countries, particularly in Africa and Latin America, was the cause of the development crisis affecting an unprecedented number of countries. Not only had imports been compressed considerably, but since 1984 a good number of countries had been experiencing a negative resource transfer. According to the report of the Secretary-General (A/42/272-E/1987/72) on the question, the reverse transfer of resources from developing to developed countries had amounted to $24 billion in 1985 and 1986, and there was the risk that those levels would not change much in the next few years. The negative transfer was jeopardizing adjustment efforts in many countries. More generally, heavy debt burdens were compromising investments in productive capacity, infrastructure and social expenditure by the public sector. In a significant number of countries, social indicators—nutritional standards, for example—had deteriorated. Most developing countries had also been hurt in 1986 by enormous losses caused by changes in the terms of trade. In that year, prices of non-fuel primary commodities had reached on average their lowest point in real terms since the 1930s and the energy-exporting countries were confronted by a deterioration in their terms of trade that exceeded 40 per cent. As a result, according to the World Economic Survey 1987, developing countries had experienced a net loss in 1986 amounting to $94 billion.

19. While at the Louvre meeting in Paris, and more recently at the Venice economic summit meeting, the major developed market economies had increased their efforts to co-operate in striving for non-inflationary sustained growth, anxiety persisted in the financial markets. The federal budget deficit of the United States was too large; although policies were being implemented to reduce the deficit, its size alone made the political task a formidable one. At the same time, the enormous trade imbalances of the three largest industrial economies were causing significant strains. Capital flows to accommodate those imbalances were not automatic, causing considerable instability in exchange rates, political tensions and even protectionist actions. For many delegations, the increased interdependence among countries made concerted macro-economic adjustment among the key actors in the world economy a particularly urgent need.

20. Most delegations shared the view that the short-term economic outlook was disturbing despite lower inflation and improved fiscal balances in many developed market economies. Recent projections by international institutions—including the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD)—indicated that growth in the developed market economies would remain in the range of 2 to 3 per cent over the next few years. That amount was insufficient to revive international trade, improve the prices of primary commodities, alleviate the debt burdens of developing countries, resolve the trade imbalances of the large industrialized countries and reduce the rate of unemployment. The planned growth in the combined net material product of the economies of Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union was somewhat above 4 per cent, and in developing countries as a whole a slight acceleration was expected as oil prices improved and the recession in energy-exporting countries ended. Yet, even if the actual performance of both groups of countries came close to current projections, their performance would still be much weaker than it had been in the 1970s.

21. Acknowledging that fact, many representatives expressed their anxiety about the fragility of the world economic system. Not only was the pace of growth slow, but downward risks could easily lead the world economy into a recession. The situation raised serious concern about the ability of the existing international economic system to cope with the current strains. In a period of volatile capital flows, exchange rate instability, generally depressed but still fluctuating primary commodity prices, unprecedented domestic external and internal imbalances, strong protectionist pressures, high real interest rates and virtually no room for manoeuvre in debtor developing countries, any new shock to the world economy might have far-reaching consequences. It could precipitate a global recession with wide-ranging social and political repercussions in the developing world. Joint action to achieve greater stability and a larger measure of predictability as a basis for sustained non-inflationary growth therefore remained a central issue in the international agenda.

The need to reduce instability

22. The fragility of the world economy was seen by many representatives as the result of the current instability in key economic parameters. Such uncertainty made it unusually difficult to forecast even short-term events and jeopardized future investment, growth and development in all countries, developed as well as developing. Several representatives referred to the critical need to create a favourable investment climate in developing countries and stressed the importance of reducing market uncertainties to attract foreign investors. Some delegations supported a proposal to hold a world monetary conference under United Nations or other auspices to help promote reliable and predictable monetary and financial relations among States.

23. A number of representatives referred to the report of the Secretary-General on a concept of international economic security (A/42/314-B/1987/77) and noted its conclusion that the economic, social and political costs of economic instability and unreliability were increasing. Some endorsed the Secretary-General's recommendation to establish within the United Nations an early warning system to alert Governments and the private sector to emerging economic and social trends - for example, trends in population, resources and technology - and thus contribute to economic stability and longer-term predictability. In that connection, a number of representatives from both developed and developing countries urged the major Powers to reduce their expenditures on arms and nuclear weaponry and promote peace and disarmament.

Trade

24. A large number of delegations noted with concern that the rate of growth of world trade had been declining and that protectionism, rather than being rolled back, had increased to the point of threatening a full-scale trade war among some of the industrialized countries. Nearly all delegations welcomed the new round of trade negotiations launched at Punta del Este, Uruguay, in 1986 and promised their Governments' full and active support for its major objectives of further liberalizing world trade and strengthening the multilateral trading system and the role of GATT. While espousing respect for the "rules of the game", delegations also endorsed one of the general principles governing the negotiations - differential and more favourable treatment for the developing countries. In addition, several representatives of the centrally planned economies, including the largest of those economies, reaffirmed their interest in having closer contacts with GATT and participating fully in the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations.

25. The link between the trading system and the monetary and financial system was emphasized by some representatives, who noted with concern that their Governments had to reduce imports of often essential goods to service the steep interest payments on their debts. The misalignment of exchange rates, especially among the Group of Five industrialized countries, had also added considerably to trade tensions. A few representatives spoke of the need for all countries to restore an element of competitiveness in their production of goods and services, for both the benefit of their domestic populations and the promotion of their exports.
Resource transfers

26. A number of representatives noted with regret the slow growth or decline in recent years in the annual commitments of the multilateral financial institutions and the stagnation since the early 1980s in total official development assistance flows in real terms. Those trends, as described in the World Economic Survey 1987, confirmed their view that multilateral finance for development should expand significantly beyond current levels. Representatives of all groups of countries supported that view. Several from developed market economies reaffirmed the long-called-for target of allocating 0.7 per cent of their GNP to official development assistance and welcomed the reference to the target in the conclusions of the recent Venice economic summit meeting.

27. The drying up of commercial bank lending to developing countries, in particular those in Latin America facing serious problems of indebtedness, and the redirection of international capital flows towards the United States, were cited by many as factors that had further worsened the impact of slow growth in official finance for development. The findings in the report of the Secretary-General on the net transfer of resources from developing to developed countries (A/42/272-E/1987/72) were noted, although some delegations questioned the legitimacy of the concept itself and noted that different definitions produced different conclusions. Several representatives contrasted the current situation to that at the end of the Second World War, when the United States had put the Marshall Plan into effect with $13 billion for the reconstruction of Europe; they advocated a similar scheme for developing countries today. However, the representative of a major donor country expressed the view that new resources alone were not sufficient to ensure development and that more attention should be given to the way in which resources were spent.

28. Delegations voiced nearly unanimous concern about the critical economic and social situation in Africa, especially sub-Saharan Africa. The need to mobilize concessory financial assistance and debt relief for those countries was reaffirmed. The summary of the survey of economic and social conditions in Africa, 1985-1986 (E/1987/61) and the statement made by the Executive Secretary of the Economic Commission for Africa were noted. In that regard, several new initiatives were welcomed, such as the World Bank Special Facility for Sub-Saharan Africa, which provided $1.6 billion in 1986, and the Paris Club of donor countries' decision to consider debt-relief measures for the poorest countries. The representatives of some individual donor countries mentioned their policies to extend rescheduling periods and lower interest payments on debts for those countries. Delegations expressed their appreciation of the Secretary-General's initiative in establishing the Advisory Group on Financial Flows for Africa.

Food and agriculture

29. A number of delegations pointed out that the number of hungry people in the world had been increasing every year for over a decade, while at the same time global food supplies had reached record levels. Growing hunger and malnutrition had not been caused by a scarcity of food, it was noted, but by the lack of access to food by those who needed it. Several delegations endorsed the renewed commitment of the international community to work together to conquer hunger and malnutrition, as affirmed in the Beijing Declaration of the World Food Council, 2/ adopted unanimously at its thirteenth session in June 1987. Support was also expressed for the programme of work of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, which was aimed at raising food production, reducing malnutrition and lowering poverty levels among the rural poor.

30. The often negative impact of structural adjustment measures on food security and nutritional levels in developing countries was also discussed. While food production had increased rapidly in some parts of the world, it had stagnated or even declined where it was needed most. Several delegations noted that over-supply in world markets had resulted in falling prices for commodities, causing a negative impact on the export earnings of producing countries. Some delegations linked the decline in food export prices to growing protectionism in agricultural trade, including export subsidies and import restrictions, and called for multilateral action within the new GATT round of trade negotiations to redress the serious imbalances in world agricultural trade.

Human resources and the role of women

31. The importance of human resources development within the overall development process was stressed by many representatives and by the Administrator of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) in particular. They also pointed out the essential role given the Council in promoting social progress and better standards of living. While a number of delegations noted with approval the attention given to human resources development - including education, skills training and other opportunities for self-improvement - by those parts of the United Nations system traditionally associated with social development, appreciation was also expressed for the work of the more economically oriented organizations and bodies that had recently included social concerns in their priority agenda. The statement by the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) that the social impact of adjustment measures must be of prime concern was welcomed. The important role of UNDP and the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), in particular in human resources development, was also endorsed. Some delegations echoed the call of the Executive Director of UNICEF for the successful completion by 1989 of a convention on the rights of the child, currently being drafted by a working group of the Commission on Human Rights.

32. A great many delegations voiced special concern regarding the need to include women fully in the development process. Noting that women were often a forgotten factor, delegations urged the multilateral development institutions and individual countries themselves to give high priority to the inclusion of women in all aspects of the development process.

Environment and development

33. A number of delegations referred to the recently published report of the World Commission on Environment and Development, 3/ established at the request of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to formulate proposals for long-term environmental strategies for achieving sustainable development by the year 2000. They noted with approval its conclusion that the economy and the ecology of the world must be considered simultaneously and on an equal level. To achieve a concept of sustainable development, multilateral institutions and government policy makers must tackle problems through an integrated approach, taking into account such matters as population, resources, health and environment.

34. Several delegations pointed out the important impact that human settlement policies and marine affairs management could have on overall development goals. Particular attention was given by some to housing concerns in the context of the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless.

35. Many representatives noted with concern the new global threat to health posed by the disease AIDS and called for international co-operation, as well as national action, to fight the pandemic. They welcomed the central role of the World Health Organization (WHO) in initiating a special programme to combat AIDS. Broad support from the international community was pledged and a co-ordinated approach by the entire United Nations system was called for.

Growth and development policies

36. Many representatives stressed that from a global perspective the narrowing of external and internal imbalances in the major market economies was essential for non-inflationary sustained growth and required action at both the international and domestic levels. The Louvre Agreement and the recommendations of the Venice economic summit meeting included important elements designed to ensure less exchange rate instability and more coherence in macro-economic policies in general. However, on the domestic side, more decisive efforts were required. Policies aimed in the right direction - but characterized by excessive caution, according to several representatives - had been adopted by the three largest market economies. Since extremely large changes were required in current imbalances, it seemed necessary to take additional steps to ensure that the budget deficit of the United States and the trade imbalances of the three largest market economies would diminish soon. The maintenance of an open-trading system was also crucial. Respect for the rules of the game, a strengthened GATT and strong support for the new round of trade negotiations were all critical elements in reviving world economic growth. In the context of development, full observance by the industrialized countries of rollback and standstill commitments - as agreed at the Ministerial Meeting of GATT in Uruguay - was necessary to promote exports of developing countries and alleviate the debt-service burden.

37. The solution to the external debt problem, according to a large number of delegations, constituted a critical ingredient in the revival of investment and growth in many developing countries. Growth-oriented adjustment required sustained efforts by debtor countries and an increase in resource transfers. Several representatives stressed the importance of implementing some of the proposals or initiatives being discussed in different forums. The General Assembly, in resolution 41/202, had recently reached an important consensus that should guide the resolution of the debt problem. Many delegations emphasized the need for prompt implementation of the resolution without discriminating among debtor countries, consideration of debt relief - particularly in the case of least developed countries - and reductions in interest costs. However, in the view of several delegations, the case-by-case approach should be maintained, since countries had different economic structures and domestic policies.

38. To increase the transfer of resources to developing countries many representatives emphasized the need for full implementation of the relevant provisions of the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (General Assembly resolution S-13/2, annex). Most delegations noted the critical importance of a capital increase in the World Bank. It was observed that the new approaches taken by the Paris Club in debt negotiations were providing increased flexibility to countries negotiating official debts. But in the view of the Managing Director of IMF, even with generous Paris Club reschedulings, substantially more resources would be required. He informed the Council that he was requesting the international community to triple the resources available for the IMF Structural Adjustment Facility to $9 billion.

39. Several representatives observed that progress towards disarmament was linked not only to enhanced economic security but also to development financing. A reduction in the arms expenditures of developing countries should free resources for domestic investments, while a reduction of such expenditures in industrialized countries could lead to increased resource transfers to the developing world. A substantial number of delegations stressed the need for a much larger recycling to developing areas of the large current account surpluses of major industrialized countries. The report of the Committee for Development Planning 4/ called for wider support of the Okita proposal to utilize the Japanese surplus for world economic development. The representative of Japan observed that to promote further financial flows to developing countries apart from a substantial increase in official development assistance, his country would recycle more than $20 billion over the next three years. According to many delegations, the depressed state of primary commodity prices made it urgent to ratify the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities and to enhance the role of the IMF Compensatory Financing Facility.

40. According to a number of delegations there were important lessons to be derived from the group of developing economies that had grown at a comparatively fast pace during the 1980s. It was important to let market signals play a greater role in resource allocation, encourage initiative, rely more on domestic savings by promoting private savings and a careful management of the fiscal budget and public enterprises, and not to delay adjustment when macro-economic imbalances became large. The private sector, particularly if excessive controls were removed, could in most countries make a considerable contribution to economic growth. Several delegations stressed the role of the public sector, which was dominant in many countries. That role should be enhanced, and the report of the Secretary-General on the role of the public sector in promoting the economic development of developing countries (A/42/138-E/1987/50) provided useful guidelines for that purpose. Also, with regard to the role of economic instruments, various representatives cited the ongoing restructuring of the economic mechanisms of some centrally planned economies. The restructuring involved internal as well as external aspects. Nevertheless, the main purpose was to bring about more effective participation in the international division of labour, enhanced international trade and other forms of reliable and mutually advantageous co-operation.

Seventh session of UNCTAD

41. Nearly all delegations referred to the seventh session of UNCTAD, which would begin in Geneva on 9 July 1987. They welcomed it as an opportunity for further discussion of the essential issues of development. In addressing the Council, the Secretary-General of UNCTAD warned of the danger to the world economy posed by continued slow growth, depressed commodity prices, high debt-service obligations and increasing trade conflicts. He urged Member States to reverse the maladjustments and distortions in the international economic system through concrete measures aimed at revitalizing growth and development and strengthening multilateralism. He stressed the need for an overall approach to the problems at hand so that in the final outcome the Conference would provide elements of satisfaction for all groups of countries and reinvigorate the role of the United Nations in the economic and social sphere.

Role of the Council

42. The role of the Council itself was of concern to most delegations, particularly in view of the establishment of the Special Commission of the Economic and Social Council on the In-depth Study of the United Nations Intergovernmental Structure and Functions in the Economic and Social Fields, which would present its final report to the Council at its second regular session of 1988. A number of representatives said that the role of the Council was already well defined in the Charter of the United Nations; however, the Council had not adequately fulfilled its mandate over the years. They urged a renewed commitment by Member States to the United Nations — and the Council — in the economic and social fields. Some delegations expressed the view that the Council could be made more effective by strengthening its co-ordinating role in the economic and social activities of the Organization. In some cases, that might require reorganization of the intergovernmental machinery, including the subsidiary bodies of the Council. Other representatives saw a need to strengthen the Council without necessarily tampering with its organizational structure. It was noted that further discussion of the question would take place at the resumed second regular session of the Council, to be held later in the year.

Action taken by the Council

53. The Council considered proposals submitted under this item at its 32nd, 33rd, 35th and 37th meetings, on 2, 3, 8 and 9 July. An account of the discussion is contained in the relevant summary records (E/1987/SR.32, 33, 35 and 37).

Creating conditions that encourage capital formation for growth and development

54. At the 32nd meeting, on 2 July, the representative of the United States of America introduced a draft resolution (E/1987/L.36) entitled "Creating conditions that encourage capital formation for growth and development", which read as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Stressing the critical role of both foreign and domestic capital in the growth and development efforts of developing countries,

"Recognizing that developing countries have the capability to create conditions more conducive to the promotion of capital formation, inter alia, by strengthening domestic capital markets, establishing positive real rates of return in domestic financial markets, reducing government restrictions, enhancing administrative efficiency in attracting foreign portfolio and direct investment, and maintaining realistic, market-oriented exchange rates,

"Concerned that the absence of such conditions will discourage the formation of capital, inducing both foreign and domestic financial resources to seek alternative placement,

"Reaffirming that developing countries have the main responsibility for adopting vigorous measures to mobilize and utilize more fully their domestic financial resources for growth and development,

"Reaffirming also that the international community will recognize and support policies on the part of developing countries that are conducive to capital formation,

"Recognizing that external financial resources, both public and private, constitute an indispensable element of support for developing countries in their development efforts and that such flows are best utilized in an environment that permits the efficient application of capital to priority needs,

"1. Calls upon Member States to bear in mind the importance of creating conditions that encourage capital formation when establishing and implementing national development plans and policies;

"2. Invites the Secretary-General and appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, within their existing mandates, programmes and priorities, to provide technical assistance and advice to interested Member States to create those conditions."
55. The observer for Guatemala, B/ on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations that are members of the Group of 77, subsequently proposed amendments (E/1987/L.47 and Corr.1) to the draft resolution, by which:

(a) The first preambular paragraph would be replaced by the following text:

"Stressing the crucial role of capital formation in the growth and development process";

(b) The following two new preambular paragraphs would be inserted after the first preambular paragraph:

"Reaffirming the principles contained in the Declaration and the Programme of Action on a New International Economic Order, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, and General Assembly resolutions 3362 (S-VII) and 35/36,

"Bearing in mind that capital formation depends on both domestic savings and external resources";

(c) The second to sixth preambular paragraphs would be replaced by the following paragraphs:

"Recognizing that developing countries have the need for conditions more conducive to the promotion of capital formation, which depends on a supportive external economic environment, in particular on lowering persistently high real interest rates, elimination of protectionist measures by developed countries, revitalization of prices and stabilization of commodity markets and reversing the trend of net financial flows from developing to developed countries,

"Concerned that the absence of such conditions impedes the formation of capital,

Reaffirming that developing countries have the responsibility to mobilize more fully their domestic financial resources for growth and development and that developed countries have the responsibility to create adequate conditions for a supportive external environment,

"Affirming that the international community should support efforts conducive to capital formation,

"Recognizing that the external financial resources, both public and private, constitute an indispensable element of support for developing countries in their development efforts";

(d) In operative paragraph 1, the words "that encourage" would be replaced by the words "which permit and encourage"; the words "particularly in the implementation of economic policies of developed countries" would be added at the end of the paragraph;

(e) Operative paragraph 2 would be deleted.

56. The representative of the United States of America subsequently proposed a revised draft resolution (E/1987/L.36/Rev.1), which read as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

"Stressing the crucial role of capital formation as one of the elements in the growth and development process,

"Bearing in mind that capital formation depends on both domestic savings and external resources,

"Recognizing that developing countries have the capability to create conditions more conducive to the promotion of capital formation and that the decision on the policy framework of national capital formation falls entirely within the jurisdiction of a sovereign State,

"Recognizing also that policies which encourage capital formation, inter alia, strengthening domestic capital markets, establishing positive real rates of return in domestic financial markets, implementing effective national development plans which include transparent policies for specific economic sectors, reducing unnecessary Government restrictions, enhancing administrative efficiency in attracting foreign portfolio and direct investment and maintaining realistic, market-oriented exchange rates, may differ in countries at different stages of development,

"Concerned that the absence of such conditions will discourage the formation of capital,

"Recognizing that conditions which promote capital formation also depend upon a supportive international environment, including policies that encompass, inter alia, the dismantling of protectionism and the expansion of international trade, increased financial flows, lending programmes by the international financial institutions and commercial banks in support of growth-oriented measures, lower real interest rates and improvements in commodity markets, as well as coherent and co-ordinated policies on the part of industrialized countries, including strengthened multilateral surveillance, which address the imbalances in the world economy,

"Reaffirming that developing countries have the responsibility to mobilize and utilize more fully and effectively their domestic financial resources for growth and development,

"Affirming that the international community will support policies on the part of developing countries that are conducive to capital formation,

"Affirming also that developing countries which have low productivity and are experiencing difficulties in generating sizable savings for capital formation should be assisted by the international community, including donor Governments, within the context of assistance programmes,
"Recognizing that external financial resources, both public and private, constitute an indispensable element of support for developing countries in their development efforts and that the effective and efficient application of such external resources to priority needs will enhance the benefits of capital formation,

"Recognizing also that it is important for developing countries to retain a certain portion of their export earnings for the purpose of capital formation,

"Convinced that the experiences of various countries on capital formation and the lessons learned could be helpful when considered on the basis of and adapted to concrete conditions in a specific country,

"1. Calls upon Member States to bear in mind the importance of creating conditions that encourage capital formation when establishing and implementing national development plans and policies and to work in a spirit of common commitment and mutual co-operation to ensure an international economic environment which supports that goal;

"2. Invites the Secretary-General and appropriate organs, organizations and bodies of the United Nations system, within their existing mandates, programmes and priorities, and avoiding duplication, to provide technical assistance and advice to interested Member States to create those conditions and overcome the constraints faced by developing countries regarding capital formation."

57. The observer for Guatemala, 8/ on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations that are members of the Group of 77, then proposed amendments (E/1987/L.49) to the revised draft resolution, by which:

(a) The title would read:

"Encouraging capital formation for growth and development";

(b) A new first preambular paragraph would be added, reading as follows:

"Recalling General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, containing the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, containing the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation and 35/56 of 5 December 1980, containing the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade";

(c) The third preambular paragraph would be replaced by the following text:

"Recognizing that the policy framework of national capital formation falls entirely within the jurisdiction of a sovereign State and that the process should take place in accordance with national priorities, policies and objectives";

(d) The fourth preambular paragraph would be deleted;
(e) The fifth to eighth preambular paragraphs would be replaced by the following paragraphs:

"Concerned that the absence of such factors will impede the formation of capital,

"The Economic and Social Council,

... [the first seven preambular paragraphs are the same as the first seven preambular paragraphs of the draft resolution in paragraph 215 below],

"Recognizing the urgent need for substantial progress in stimulating food production in developing countries, and that international commodity policies have an important bearing on that aim,

"Emphasizing the great importance of ensuring that farmers stay in their production location and that their massive migration would have a significant adverse social, economic and environmental effect,

"Reaffirming also that agriculture has a central impact on other sectors of the economies of the developing countries,

"1. Notes with concern that hunger and malnutrition have been increasing since the World Food Conference in 1974 and that the number of people suffering from hunger and malnutrition has grown in the 1980s and that there has been a move away from the central objective of the World Food Conference;

... [operative paragraphs 2-5 are the same as operative paragraphs 2-5 of the draft resolution in paragraph 215 below];

"6. Reaffirms that developing countries have a right to protect their agricultural production from imports to ensure a solid basis for self-reliance;

"7. Reaffirms that subsidies for agricultural exports and the protectionist practices that certain developed countries adopt in the agricultural sector result in the artificial accumulation of excess stocks on the world market, at the same time depressing prices, and do not serve the purposes of world food security, to the extent that the domestic output of developing countries may be eliminated from local and international markets;

"8. Requests the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to provide the Economic and Social Council, at its second regular session of 1988, with a comprehensive study of the trends in the international market for agricultural products, together with suggestions on ways and means of increasing the share of developing countries in international agricultural trade;

"9. Calls for the prompt and full implementation of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, particularly in view of the close link between the fall in commodity export earnings and the accumulation of debt;

"10. Appeals to developing countries, developed market economy countries and socialist countries of Eastern Europe that have not yet done so to ratify the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities and appeals also to the United States of America to reconsider its decision not to ratify the Agreement;

"12. Regrets that the expected foreign resources in support of African efforts at recovery and development made in accordance with their commitments under the Programme of Action have not often materialized, even when African Governments have carried out all their commitments;

... [operative paragraphs 13 and 14 are the same as operative paragraphs 12 and 13 of the draft resolution in paragraph 215 below];

"15. Welcomes the encouraging progress in domestic policy reform in support of the food and agriculture sector in many developing countries and calls on the international community to accelerate assistance for those efforts;

"16. Calls upon all countries to use the opportunity of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations to move towards the resolution of agricultural trade problems, taking into account all the general principles governing those negotiations, including the principle of differential and more favourable treatment, embodied in part IV of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade;

"17. Endorses the recommendations of the international meeting organized by the United Nations Development Programme and the World Food Council at Lomé in May 1987, which identify priority areas for the enhancement of South-South co-operation in food and agriculture, and calls on Governments and national, regional and interregional organizations to work together more closely to strengthen regional and interregional food and agriculture programmes;

"18. Calls upon industrialized countries to make a greater effort to increase their participation in the third replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and urges other contributors to the Fund that are in a position to do so to make additional efforts to contribute to the resources of the Fund with a view to ensuring the highest possible level of replenishment while preserving the institution and its unique structure;
... [operative paragraphs 19 and 20 are the same as operative paragraphs 18 and 19 of the draft resolution in paragraph 215 below];

"21. Urges the regional development banks, regional commissions, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development and donor countries to facilitate practical arrangements to accelerate financing and technical and economic co-operation among developing countries, giving particular attention to the expansion of tripartite arrangements through which developing countries would help to finance South-South co-operative action;

"22. Urges Governments to ensure and enhance the participation of women in the formulation and implementation of national food policies, plans and projects, in view of the importance accorded to food and the acknowledged role of women farmers in food production, marketing and family nutrition and in view of the consensus achieved at Nairobi on the Forward-looking Strategies for the Advancement of Women;

212. At the 24th meeting, on 3 July, statements were made by the representatives of Denmark (on behalf of the States Members of the United Nations that are members of the European Economic Community) and Egypt, and the observer for Guatemala.

215. At the same meeting, after an exchange of views, draft resolution E/1987/C.1/L.13/Rev.1 was further orally revised by the representative of Egypt, on behalf of the sponsors. The revised text read as follows:

"The Economic and Social Council,

Recalling the Declaration and the Programme of Action on the Establishment of a New International Economic Order, contained in General Assembly resolutions 3201 (S-VI) and 3202 (S-VI) of 1 May 1974, the Charter of Economic Rights and Duties of States, contained in Assembly resolution 3281 (XXIX) of 12 December 1974, Assembly resolution 3362 (S-VII) of 16 September 1975 on development and international economic co-operation, and the International Development Strategy for the Third United Nations Development Decade, contained in the annex to Assembly resolution 35/56 of 5 December 1980, and Assembly resolution 41/191 of 8 December 1986 on food ad agricultural problems,

Reaffirming the Universal Declaration on the Eradication of Hunger and Malnutrition adopted by the World Food Conference,
"Stressing the imperative need to keep food and agricultural issues at the centre of global attention,

"Reaffirming the United Nations Programme of Action for African Economic Recovery and Development 1986-1990 (General Assembly resolution S-13/2), in which the African countries and the international community committed themselves, inter alia, to giving priority attention and increased resources to the rehabilitation and development of food and agriculture in Africa,

"Reaffirming that the right to food is a universal human right which should be guaranteed to all people and, in that context, believing in the general principle that food should not be used as an instrument of political pressure, either at the national or at the international level,

"Reaffirming also that the maintenance of peace and security and the strengthening of international cooperation in food and agriculture are important for improved economic conditions and enhanced food security,

"Reaffirming that for most developing countries self-reliance in food and agriculture constitutes an important objective,

"Recognizing the urgent need for substantial progress in stimulating food production in developing countries, and that the international agricultural commodity policies have an important bearing on the attainment of that objective,

"Recognizing also that agriculture has a central impact on other sectors of the economies of many countries, particularly the developing countries,

"Concerned that growing protectionism, the decline in commodity prices, the deterioration in terms of trade and limited access to markets have had a negative effect on the situation of international agricultural trade, particularly for developing countries,

"Welcoming the growing international consensus since the special ministerial session of the Contracting Parties to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade held at Punta del Este, Uruguay, from 15 to 20 September 1986, in favour of agricultural trade reform at the earliest possible time,

"1. Notes with concern that hunger and malnutrition have been increasing since the World Food Conference in 1974 and that the number of people suffering from hunger and malnutrition has grown in the 1980s and that the central objective of the World Food Conference remains largely unfulfilled;

"2. Takes note with appreciation of the oral report made by the Executive Director of the World Food Council, on behalf of the Secretary-General, on the liberalization of international agricultural trade;

"4. Endorses the Beijing Declaration of the World Food Council, annexed to the present resolution, as a reaffirmation of the commitment of the world community to eradication of hunger and malnutrition and as a framework to accelerate action to attain this objective;

"5. Calls upon Governments and international assistance agencies to redouble national and regional food strategy efforts as part of comprehensive economic and social action to eliminate hunger and poverty;

"6. Recognizes that developing countries pursuing self-reliance may be obliged to adopt policies that can protect their agricultural production from imports benefiting from export support measures;

"7. Reaffirms that support measures for agricultural exports, together with other protectionist practices that certain developed countries apply in the agricultural sector, contribute to an accumulation of excess stocks on the world market and that depressed international prices do not serve the purposes of world food security in that the domestic output of developing countries may be eliminated from local and international markets;

"8. Calls upon all countries to take the opportunity presented by the seventh session of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development to consider pursuing efforts to conclude commodity agreements and arrangements, as appropriate, within the framework of the Integrated Programme for Commodities, to improve the effectiveness of appropriate stabilization schemes and to seek agreement on more effective co-operation in international commodity policy, notably through the early entry into force of the Agreement Establishing the Common Fund for Commodities;

"10. Expresses its appreciation to those developed countries that have taken specific measures in support of African efforts towards recovery and development under the Programme of Action;

"11. Expresses deep concern that the expected foreign resources in support of African efforts at recovery and development made in accordance with the commitments of the international community under the Programme of Action have not so far materialized, and urges the international community to expedite its support for those efforts, and to give further attention to this problem at the mid-term review of the Programme of Action during the forty-third session of the General Assembly;

"12. Recognizes the need for more domestic and international financial resources for science, technology and agricultural training within Africa, including the support needed to tackle the massive problem of reorienting and greatly strengthening African agricultural research and production systems and to develop and strengthen its indigenous scientific and technological capability and bring about a transition from extractive to regenerative agricultural practices;
"13. Welcomes the efforts made by some members of the international community to support the fight against the locust and grasshopper infestation in Africa, and commends the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations for its co-ordinating role and for establishing the Emergency Centre for Locust Operations;

"14. Welcomes the encouraging progress in efforts made in support of the food and agriculture sector in many developing countries and calls on the international community to accelerate assistance for those efforts;

"15. Calls upon all countries to use the opportunity of the Uruguay Round of multilateral trade negotiations, which is of decisive importance, to move vigorously towards the liberalization of agricultural trade and necessary policy reforms, taking into account all the general principles governing those negotiations, including the principle of differential and more favourable treatment, embodied in part IV of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and related instruments;

"16. Takes note of the recommendations of the interregional meeting organized by the United Nations Development Programme and the World Food Council at Lomé in May 1987, which identify priority areas for the enhancement of South-South co-operation in food and agriculture, and calls on Government and national, regional and interregional organizations to work together more closely to strengthen regional and interregional food and agriculture programmes;

"17. Calls upon all countries to make a greater effort to participate actively in the negotiations on the third replenishment of the International Fund for Agricultural Development, and urges all contributors to the Fund to make additional efforts to contribute to the resources of the Fund with a view to ensuring the highest possible level of replenishment while preserving the institution and its unique structure;

"18. Reiterates its urgent appeal to the few donor countries that have not already done so to make a contribution to the Fund’s Special Programme for Sub-Saharan African Countries Affected by Drought and Desertification, and invites the international community to make a further financial effort so that the $300 million target of the Fund can be reached at the earliest possible date;
